Going On, Peter Reading, Publisher: Bloodaxe (included in Collected Poems 2: Poems) "What he [Peter Reading] uniquely had was an obsessive craftsmanship, at ease with every kind of verse-form, matched with a macabre, bizarre sense of humour.

Ruth Stone Ruth Stone: She was 87 when she received the National Book Award for her collection In the Next Galaxy, and was still writing extraordinary poetry well into her 90s. Her acclaimed retrospective, What Love Comes To: A greatly loved teacher, she was still working into her 80s. What Love Comes To opens up her own particular world of serious laughter; of uncertainty and insight; of mystery and acceptance. They are understandable, often with a very clear surface, but not simple – their intelligence is crackling and complex. She is a poet of great humor – mockery even – and a bold eye, not obedient. There is also disrespect in her poems, a taken freedom, that feels to me like a strength of the disenfranchised. When we hear a Stone first line, it is as if we have been hearing this voice in our head all day, and just now the words become audible. She is a seer, easily speaking clear truths somehow unmentioned until now. She has a tragic deadpan humor: Photo by Paul O. Boisvert, Ruth Stone: Poems through a life My mother read poetry aloud when she was nursing me. She loved Tennyson deeply. She taught me all those poems by heart, so by the time I was two I knew many poems. What I absorbed from her was both a cadence of language and a music of poetry and patterns. Later on, when I was able, I wrote all these patterns of English poetry. Women who love to write poetry are the hagfish of the world. We eat the language. And then the poem would write itself. The thing knew itself already. My father was a musician and played the drums all the time, so I learned a lot of rhythms just through my ear. Rhyme is automatic with me. I use a lot of internal rhyme. When I was younger there was a kind of singing in all my poetry, but after Walter died, that younger singing was subdued, not harsh enough. Of course I still have a lot of inner rhyme. But I needed to find a different way to write. Experience and suffering altered me. Having to endure and be strong for my daughters altered me. And also the past kept intervening, and then it was as though there was no present, but only the past. And that kept going for a long long time. Gilbert and Mary Ann Wehler. There are some poets who, when they read, leave at the end of each poem a little silence to be filled by the sighs of the audience as it recoils from so much wisdom in such an exquisite package. Ruth was not one of them. I think we all felt her need to unburden herself of an enormous weight of language and imagery. Now she is there forever. This is a shocking state of affairs. Her poetry is profound and beautiful. It will alter the way you consider the art. What Love Comes To: New and Selected Poems is, for me, the most captivating discovery of the last few decades. Ruth Stone is a true US original. Now aged 93 and almost blind, she is still writing poetry of extraordinary variety and radiance - fierce feminist and political poems and hilarious send-ups, meditations on ageing, love and loss.

Peter Reading () Peter Reading reads extracts from his book-length sequences Going On (), Evagatory () and (), the first two of these from his Collected Poems: 2 ().

He was educated at Monkton Combe School in Bath. He commented that this "confirmed his natural pacificism". I quit journalism in the mid-Sixties and since then have been a free-falling poet, playwright and writer of stories. Satire was his speciality. Commissioned to write a poem about Prince Charles and his special relationship as Prince of Wales with the people of Wales, his measured response was short and to the point: My brain socialist My eyes pacifist My blood revolutionary [11] Mitchell was in the habit of stipulating in any preface to his collections: I was run over by the truth one day. As Mitchell delivered his lines from the pavement in front of the National Gallery , angry demonstrators in the square below scuffled with police. He was later responsible for the well-respected stage adaptation of The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe , a production of the Royal Shakespeare Company that premiered in November Over the years he updated the poem to take into account recent events. Fellow writers could be effusive in their tributes. John Berger said that, "Against the present British state he opposes a kind of revolutionary populism , bawdiness , wit and the tenderness sometimes to be found between animals. For two months he had been suffering from pneumonia. He intended it as a Christmas gift to "all the friends, family and animals he loved". He did this through his poetry, his plays, his song lyrics and his own performances. Through this huge body of work, he was able to raise the spirits of his audiences, in turn exciting, inspiring, saddening and enthusing them He has sung, chanted, whispered and shouted his poems in every kind of place imaginable, urging us to love our lives, love our minds and bodies and to fight against tyranny , oppression and exploitation. He also has two sons and a daughter from his previous marriage to Maureen Bush: Briony, Alistair and Danny. There are nine grandchildren:
