Moore, our Project Analyst Ahmed Abulkhair and our talented team members. I never felt alone while undertaking this role. In order to measure the success of the project, a delivery and evaluation team was created. The team sent out an electronic survey to all participants present at the symposium. Moore said the students would still learn Project Management skills regardless of the success of the project. CMIS graduate programs, the School of Business recently changed its curriculum requiring all undergraduate business majors to take a class in managing group projects. This new class MGMT addresses both the hard skills and soft skills that contribute to project success. To see the video, click here. Undergraduate and graduate degrees are offered in accounting, computer management and information systems, economics, finance, management and marketing. For more information, visit the School of Business. The presentation was made on the first floor lobby of the Science Building on campus. It is hoped that both the current faculty and our past students can and will contribute to this endowment as they see fit. This gift will carry on his legacy at SIUE for generations of future students. Our wide range of biological materials is stored in various locations and with varying levels of quality. After moving to the new Edwardsville campus in , he became general herpetology editor in for the American Society of Ichthyologists and Herpetologists for the journal COPEIA and continued in that position until He has published approximately illustrations, maps and peer reviewed papers in which eight new species or subspecies were described. In , a Texas and Mexican lizard, Sceloporus poinsettii axtelli was named in his honor by Robert G. College of Arts and Sciences: Faculty help students explore diversity of ideas, experiences and people while learning to think and live as fulfilled, productive members of a global society. The project will improve system reliability, operations and capacity. Plans were to look at improving reliability, operations and capacity to support the campus facilities master plan. During the planning process, three alternatives were analyzed: Analyzing life-cycle costs over and year periods found that a complete replacement and upgrade of system components had a lower overall cost than performing no initial work and a comparable cost to a project for selective replacements and upgrades. The project will be accomplished in multiple phases as funding is available and to coordinate power outages with the academic schedule. An engineer, independent of the consulting architect, will provide design and document review of the plans and specifications on behalf of the Board prior to bidding. The project cost will be finalized once a comprehensive estimate is determined. Funding is expected to be from ITS fees and University operating funds. Plans will examine designs and costs to modify mechanical and electrical systems by replacing the heat exchangers, reconfiguring or replacing

The current room configuration was designed for the mainframe which was decommissioned in SIUE will use its on-call engineering firm, BRiC Partnership, to help determine the extent of the work to be done and the estimated cost. Final project and budget approval and award of contracts will require further Board action. Funding is anticipated from student fitness center fees and University plant funds. Plans will look at designs and costs to construct an addition to the free-weight room with an expansion of approximately 4, square feet. The consultant will help determine the extent and the estimated cost of the work. With four alumni in attendance, two main themes were discussed: The importance of base knowledge and internships. Powell brought alumni back to speak to her students because of feedback she received from previous students. While the speakers were brought back to help the students, McCloud said it is good for the alumni, too. They ask thoughtful questions due to their fresh perspectives and are the heartbeat of the future of IS and business, in general. I hope the students enjoy the conversations as much as I do. For more information about the School of Business, visit: College graduates entering the business world must have management skills when it comes to group projects. Nearly 30 individuals, mostly businesspersons under 40 years of age, attended the event sponsored by the Young Professionals Group YPG. Fresh from serving as the keynote speaker last week at the Zairi Institute conference on competing in the digital economy, Furst-Bowe returned from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, and shared insights from her more than year career in higher education. Furst-Bowe had served as provost and vice chancellor for academic and student affairs since at the University of Wisconsin-Stout in Menomonie, Wis. She joined the UWS faculty in and progressed through the administrative ranks to become second in command. Furst-Bowe saw all the right elements come together at SIUE when the opportunity arose upon the retirement of her predecessor, Dr. Vaughn Vandegrift, this past spring. Online education also opens the door to more international opportunities. Keith passed away suddenly during the completion of the work. The ten chapter volume has a strong environmental component, with many of the articles touching on how human activities are affecting aquatic life, and have done so over time. The contributing authors were chosen for their cross-disciplinary approaches to research which provide new insight into well documented problems. The CCSR, in collaboration with the IERC, located at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville, released a study today highlighting strategies some districts are using to overcome obstacles anticipated from the teacher evaluation law. Known as the Performance Evaluation Reform Act, the law requires administrators and union officials in school districts across the state to agree by on plans for stricter teacher evaluation procedures that include using student academic progress as one of several teacher performance indicators. According to the report, researchers examined the teacher evaluation systems in select Illinois school districts that already had implemented some components of the new law. Using interviews with teachers, principals and administrators in those districts, researchers were able to determine that while the evaluation reforms in place were viewed as a significant upgrade over previous practices, they presented several major challenges. Common problem areas included promoting deeper understanding and more widespread acceptance of these systems, improving the accuracy and usefulness of the performance ratings, reducing the burdens on school principals, and finding appropriate ways to incorporate student achievement gains into teacher evaluation scores. The intent of the study is to assist other school districts across the state in planning new evaluation systems. The report describes numerous practical strategies that case study districts employed to overcome obstacles. The full report and a summary are available for review on the IERC website at siue. After serving as the acting associate dean for research since last year, Morgan was appointed by Associate Provost for Research and Dean of the Graduate School Jerry Weinberg. Morgan brings with her a passion for interdisciplinary collaboration and effective team-building, a commitment to raising the profile of SIUE scholarship and to increasing SIUE competitiveness with external agencies," Weinberg said. Louis Distinguished New Engineer Award, both in Her hard work has resulted and led to her oversight of 16 internal and 19 external grant projects, including a major National Science Foundation institutional grant supporting the recruitment of students into engineering. Weinberg continued that Morgan has proved herself an avid researcher and collaborator by working with colleagues from other institutions and departments. Morgan also has worked to establish teams such as the St. She left the School of Engineering, where she was the graduate program director and then chair of civil engineering to take on the role of acting associate dean last year. Which one is more endangered in the wild? The answer may be surprising. There are less than mature Wollemi pines in the wild compared to 2, mature wild giant pandas. Jane Drake, director of The Gardens, invites visitors to embark upon a global journey exploring a series of compelling tree stories from around the world. Here are two examples of endangered trees and their benefits: Thousands of people are alive today because of a chemotherapy drug paclitaxel, which originally derived from a chemical in the Pacific Yew Taxus brevifolia. It is used for breast, ovarian and lung cancer treatment. The Wild Apple Malus sieversii is the primary ancestor of domesticated apples. Wild Apple is more genetically diverse than the ones we eat, which are primarily cloned by grafting and tissue culture. The Wild Apple can be used to breed better, disease-resistant apples.

A researcher or qualified borrowing institution may initiate a loan request by contacting the Curator of Literary Manuscripts. Historical Note](#) Katherine Anne Porter was one of the most brilliant practitioners of the art of the short story. Her literary reputation rests on the stories in her Collected Stories rather than on her best-selling novel Ship of Fools. Catharine Ann Porter was an important influence on her granddaughter Callie, who adopted her name in early adulthood with only a slight orthographical change. The death of the grandmother left the family emotionally and financially adrift. About 1880, Harrison Porter relocated his family to San Antonio, where the three oldest children experienced the last of their formal education. Although she later taught at colleges and universities, she never had any formal higher education. She acquired wide-ranging knowledge through a lifetime of extensive reading on varied topics; she often annotated her books and journals as she read them, evidence of which survives in her personal library. This first of her marriages, at nine years, had the longest duration. The couple first lived in Louisiana, then moved to Houston and later Corpus Christi. This activity resulted in her first published poem, "Texas by the Gulf of Mexico," printed that year in a trade journal to which her husband subscribed. By 1890, it became apparent that the marriage was not working. Porter set out for Chicago hoping to find employment in motion pictures, though she later claimed that her plan was to work for a newspaper. She was a beautiful young woman, full of self-confidence, and, though she appeared in at least two movies for the Essanay Company, she returned to Texas within six months. She obtained a divorce from Koontz in June and shortly thereafter discovered that she had contracted tuberculosis. Between 1895 and 1900, Porter married and was divorced twice. In September 1900, Porter became a journalist for the Fort Worth Critic thanks to the help of friend Kitty Crawford, whom she had met while both of them were hospitalized in a sanatorium. Soon after her arrival in Denver, Porter very nearly died in the influenza epidemic that ravaged the country at that time. After her recovery, she resumed work on the Rocky Mountain News and, by February 1902, was the resident theater and music critic. In October 1902, Porter headed for Greenwich Village to pursue a writing career. Her immersion in the artistic milieu of the Village encouraged a move away from journalism toward creative writing. In the early months of 1903, she succeeded in publishing three stories "retold" from myth and legend in Everyland, a magazine for children. She soon became the editor of the English language section of El Heraldo de Mexico. By early 1904, she was the editor of and a contributor to the English language Magazine of Mexico, published to promote American business and development in Mexico. As she immersed herself in Mexican art and culture, she also ghostwrote a memoir entitled My Chinese Marriage. Porter left Mexico before September but returned for three months in the spring of expressly to write Outline of Mexican Popular Arts and Crafts, the catalog for an exhibit of Mexican art that was to travel across the United States. Her experiences in Mexico, including those of a third trip in , provided Porter with the material for three short stories published in Century magazine: These achievements, combined with her freelance editing and book reviews published mainly in the New York Herald Tribune and New Republic , drew Porter further into literary and intellectual circles. She reveled in an active social life and was a prolific letter writer to distant friends and relatives. Porter spent the spring and summer of with a group of other artists and writers in Merryall Valley, Connecticut. Porter enjoyed the beauty of the setting, and the contacts she established there not only inspired her writing but also helped her to get her work published. Porter undertook a major project in when she signed a contract to write a biography of Cotton Mather with the publishing house of Boni and Liveright. In spring , her friends funded a trip to Bermuda so that she could complete the biography. Porter was seriously ill at the time, partly from emotional distress, and the trip aided her recovery. She found solitude and wrote a great deal but was not able to complete the Mather biography. In fact, the book was never completed, despite extensive research and nearly fifty years of sporadic writing efforts, including another contract in with Seymour Lawrence. Porter worked on short stories while in Bermuda. That year, a book of stories with "Flowering Judas" as the title story appeared while Porter was again in Mexico. This trip to Mexico became an extended sixteen-month stay, with Porter continuing to write more essays and reviews. The journal she kept during this journey became the basis for Ship of Fools, the novel she published thirty-one years later. After four months in Berlin, Porter visited Paris and Madrid before moving with Pressly, who had received a lifetime appointment in the American foreign service, to Basel, Switzerland, for six months, where she lived from June to December . When Pressly was posted to the American Embassy in Paris, they settled there for nearly four years, marrying in March . Hacienda was published in , and Flowering Judas and Other Stories came out in , adding four more stories to those of the edition. In October , Porter and Pressly returned to the United States, with Pressly traveling to Washington to look for work and Porter settling for a time in Pennsylvania. This visit was highly productive, as she completed two of the "short novels" that appeared in Pale Horse, Pale Rider in . After a three-month reunion with Porter in New York City, Pressly found a temporary position in South America; this led to their permanent separation and eventual divorce. In September , Porter moved to New Orleans. April brought both divorce from Pressly and another marriage. It required a great deal of money and work to make it habitable, so Porter was not able to move in until the fall of , shortly after her June divorce from Erskine. The next several years saw many relocations, including to the Georgetown neighborhood of Washington, D. The Leaning Tower and Other Stories was published in in the midst of these moves and was followed eight years later by The Days Before, a book of critical essays. Porter supplemented her income by giving readings and lectures and by appearing on radio and television. When not in residence at an academic institution, she lived for extended periods in three places: The three years in Connecticut, funded largely with an advance from Seymour Lawrence, her new publisher, allowed her time to work on her novel. It was completed after she received a grant from the Ford Foundation in . Financial security and popular fame came in with the publication of Ship of Fools, which became a bestseller and was filmed by Hollywood in . Treadwell and Elizabeth Ashley as Jenny Brown. She accepted several honorary degrees, including one from the University of Maryland in , and attended White House events during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. In December , Porter announced that she would donate her papers, personal library, and other personal effects to the University of Maryland, where the Katherine Anne Porter Room was dedicated in McKeldin Library on May 15, . She moved to College Park in , in part to be closer to the university and her papers. Though in declining health, Porter continued to publish during the last decade of her life. A compilation, Collected Essays and Occasional Writings, was published in . Porter travelled to Florida in to write an essay on the Apollo 17 lunar landing for Playboy, although the piece was never written. In , she named Isabel Bayley, a woman she had met at a Kansas University seminar in , as her literary trustee. Early that same year, Porter suffered several debilitating strokes, from which she never recovered; her nephew Paul Porter was appointed as legal guardian in the fall. After the strokes, Porter received nursing care around the clock until her long life ended on September 18, 1922. Scope and Contents of the Collection The Papers of Katherine Anne Porter consist of materials dated from 1890 to 1922 that Miss Porter created, received, or collected during her lifetime. Until 1922, most of the materials came from Porter herself, but donations and purchases from other individuals continue to be incorporated. Porter was an unusually thorough collector of her own papers and saved incidental notes on scraps of paper in addition to manuscripts of major works and forty-year correspondences with individuals. Often she would come across a note many years after she wrote it and add further comments with the date and her initials. As a result, both sides of the correspondence are often present in this collection. From the early 1890s, numerous colleges and universities expressed interest in collecting parts or all of her literary manuscripts, and she donated some individual manuscripts to several of them. Porter was most interested in having her papers go to the University of Texas at Austin, but negotiations proved unsuccessful. Porter, who was ill and becoming weary of receiving honorary degrees, accepted the degree but was unable to attend the ceremony. Wilson Elkins, then university president, brought the ceremony to her. On June 28, 1922, university officials presented her degree in her home in Washington, D. C. Porter was so delighted with the honor and attention that on the morning of October 11, 1922, she called Robert A. Taft. The following week, Porter added her collections of letters, photographs, and her library furniture to the gift, and the university agreed to create and maintain the Katherine Anne Porter Room to display and make available parts of the collection to scholars. Porter sent the first box of items to the university on October 25, 1922. She continued to send small numbers of items until 1923. The largest single shipment of 1,000 books arrived in 1923. Beginning in 1923, the university continued to acquire items for the collection by purchase and donation; in most cases, these were integrated into the Porter collection, though some were established as ancillary collections.
