8W8 - Global Space Tribes A post-modern journey through globalization in the Internet age powered by the world modeling engine 8W8 8W8 - Global Space Tribes is a new way to see the world.

What if the Internet could be used to erase national borders and ethno-cultural divides creating entirely new social systems Eschewing technical jargon that could alienate the average non-techgeek, Hirt, instead, introduces the reader to 15 individuals who call themselves the Golden Sky. They are an IT think tank composed of international business people, lawyers, politicians, environmentalists, a musician, a doctor and a philosopher, all of whom share one thing in common--a futuristic vision of the future. They come together on the Big Island of Hawaii, in the home of one of their members, Winston Chee, an IT entrepreneur, for a week-long break out in which they intend to focus on an IT conundrum: The author cleverly uses the house, itself, as a living entity that, in many ways, embodies many of the same elements as their quest. Called EA-RA, it is a six-story mansion built into the side of a mountain. Unseen and undetected from outside is the vast interior which encloses a self-sustaining environment including a farm on its ground floor, the entire panoply and requisites of a modern spa and convention center on the the five top floors, all of which are hidden from view to the outside observer. He is probably a manifestation of the author, himself, conflicted and driven. Fellow whom we first meet as he sits in an airplane flying from San Francisco to an IT conference in Berlin. It is a trip he has made many times in the past, but on this trip he is gripped with a sense of anxiety. He has flown millions of miles without an incident, but his mind has made a calculation that at some point there had to be a "statistical fluctuation" which might result in? He tries to stop thinking about it by repeating a mantra silently to himself. Ultimately, somewhere over St. Louis he experiences an existential moment when he begins to question what he is seeing. That results in a dialectical switch where, for a moment, he is watching himself trying to find like-minded individuals among the houses and buildings below. We are introduced to all the main characters in the first two chapters. Except for their different vocations, they all share the same uneasiness as O. They want to see the unseen elements of their world. This tool could discern hidden values from single elements to concentrations of elements, "mountains," as they eventually see them. This is a fast and enjoyable read for both the lay reader as well as the technophile.
