Generally safe French Quarter: Generally safe Upper Garden District: Generally safe Central Business District: Generally safe during the day, slightly sketchy at night Warehouse District: Generally safe during the day, slightly sketchy at night Tremé: Sketchy during the day, be careful at night Carrolton: Generally safe during the day, slightly sketchy at night Mid-City: Sketchy during the day, be careful at night Lower 9th: Sketchy during the day, avoid at night Seafood Guide: New Orleans seafood is some of the best in the world, but eat seasonally. Shrimp, Crab, Catfish, most gulf fish, and Gator Crawfish: Spring usually over by June Oysters: Late Fall through Early Spring You can legally drink on the streets in New Orleans, but glass containers are not allowed. Recreational drugs and public nudity are not tolerated, and the NOPD will be strict. You also get a quick sight-seeing tour of the Garden District. Fare is cash only. Otherwise, public transportation in New Orleans is pretty bad. February through Mid-May are high festival season. It is a great time and good weather, but hotel rates will jump. Summer is brutally hot and humid. The hotels are very cheap and restaurants offer cheaper fixed price meals. You can save money, but be very careful. Heat stroke is fairly common. This is also Hurricane Season. Fall is another high festival season. Sundays will fill up the tourist areas with football traffic. The weather is nice, and you can walk around easily. The French Quarter is a beautiful historic site, but filled with tourist traps.
