Durant Published by D. Luther entered land on section 9, May 4, , and Norris on the 22nd of the same month on section It is stated by Henry H. The latter settled on section 23 some accounts say in , and subsequently moved away. He has since died. He was a brother-in-law of A. David WAIT also probably came in The NORTH family were early settlers in the county, their first permanent settlement being on section 32, in Lansing township. The brothers worked clearing land on the Lansing property until the fall of the same year, , when Joshua returned to the State of New York, stopping for a few weeks with an uncle who lived in Ohio. The goods were shipped by the canal to Buffalo, and thence by the steamer "Michigan" to Detroit. The steamer was blown ashore at Buffalo in the great storm of From Detroit they shipped their goods by the Central Railway to Ypsilanti, then the terminus of the road, and from that point to Ingham County by ox-team, which Joseph E. At Detroit he hired four two-horse teams to transport his goods to Ingham County. Joshua met him at Mason upon his arrival there. Henry had nine children, seven of whom are still living. Several of his sons served the Union army during the Rebellion. On his arrival with his wife and goods at Ann Arbor he found his father there with an ox-team and a load of wheat which he had brought to market. The judge was then a little boy. A part of the land now owned by Joshua was part of the purchase of his father in The old gentleman, according to the record, purchased land on section 33, Lansing township in and , and on section 3, Delhi township, in November, Joshua has five children, two sons and three daughters; a son and a daughter, both married, are now living in Bloomington, Ill. These transactions may have been a year or two earlier. Joshua NORTH tells an incident of his early life in Michigan, which illustrates the wonderful development of the county from a wilderness condition it which it was found by the settlers of forty years ago. It was on the occasion of the birth of the first child in the township, a daughter of Henry H. The family requiring a little additional help at that time, Joshua went on horseback and procured the services of a young woman living in the vicinity, and was taking her home behind him on the horse in the night, through a blind road which had been partly bushed out. He lost the path and looked for it in vain. The candle in the old-fashioned tin lantern which he carried threatened to become extinguished, and as a last resort he dismounted and made a fire in the slivered butt of a fallen tree, and leaving the young woman there searched again for the road, but not finding it concluded to make the best of the situation and stay by the fire until daylight. It was quite cool and the young people huddled close to the fire, while jumping and frisking about in the thick woods the gray wolves made anything but pleasant music to their ears. The girl was sure they were something dangerous, but young NORTH, knowing the terror they would inspire if she was fully aware of their character, insisted they were only owls, and partially quieted her fears. Esquire LEEK performed the ceremony. The two young men went via Okemos, when, in attempting to cross the Cedar River on a raft of poles and hickory bark, they were precipitated into the swift waters up to their middle, and had to walk four miles farther to the place of rendezvous. He found work at Ann Arbor getting out railroad ties, which he and an Englishman took a job of doing. Here he worked until winter, when he was attacked by another thing new to him, - Michigan ague. In January, , he hired to a Mr. In he visited relations living in Canada, and remained nearly a year. In the spring of he came to the township of Delhi. He built a chimney to it and made it quite comfortable. In the fall of , Mr. KING erected a log dwelling near where his present residence now stands. He was then a single man, and Wm. COOK, also a Scotchman, who had married his sister, lived in his house about a year and he boarded with them. The ridge was formerly very narrow on the top and vert precipitous; but Mr. KING plowed and leveled it down some twelve or fifteen feet, and made a plateau on which to build his house. Around his house on all sides Mr. KING has covered the ridge with a variety of shade and ornamental trees, including maple, cedar, pine, locust,, etc. His fruit is so abundant that it is worth very little except for his own family use. He also has a large barn built in the slope of the hill-side, and altogether a most comfortable and picturesque group of buildings and improvements. The ridge, or "hog-back," in question is a remarkable locality for the production of fruit. In he married a daughter of P. He died at the Corners in May, , after having been for many years a prominent and respected citizen. An interesting reminiscence of early days in Delhi, it may be stated that on the night of the 3rd of May, , Henry A. The night was so cold that ice formed as thick as window-glass. He removed to Lenawee Co. He purchased his land in , and did some chopping upon it the same year, but did not move his family until He and his wife are both now deceased. ALDRICH lost his life in consequence of a terrible accident, a heavy log having rolled against and upon him and broken his spine. He was a brother of H. Within the limits of this plat, which probably covers some sixty acres, there are a passenger station, a grain elevator and freight depot combined, the steam-mill of J. ABELS, and about a dozen dwellings. A telephone connects the station with Holt post-office, and there is an express and telegraph office also. The board of health for the township took possession of the dwelling of Lewis C. BURCH and made use of it for hospital purposes for about a month; and also employed the following persons to take care of the patients, - viz. For their services they were paid the following sums:
