Chapter 1 : blog.quintoapp.com:Customer reviews: Antony and Cleopatra (Shakespeare, Signet Classic)

The Signet Classics edition of the tragedy that features one of Shakespeare's greatest female characters. A magnificent drama of passion and war, this riveting play presents the complicated relationship between the seductive, cunning Egyptian queen Cleopatra and the Roman leader Mark Antony, a man torn between an empire and love.

His idealized words are undercut by the failed attempt: My queen and Eros Have by their brave instruction got upon me A nobleness in record. In the last movement of the play, Shakespeare gives Antony and Cleopatra their most eloquent poetry. We all will respond to them individually, but even Octavius Caesar can pay tribute to their brilliance. The last two clips include these remarkable passages: Hast thou no care of me? Shall I abide In this dull world, which in thy absence is 60 No better than a sty? O, see, my women, [Anthony dies. The odds is gone, And there is nothing left remarkable Beneath the visiting moon. I dreamt there was an Emperor Antony. O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man. If it might please yeâ€” Cleopatra. Most sovereign creatureâ€” Cleopatra. His legs bestrid the ocean: Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown In Rome, as well as I: In their thick breaths, Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded, And forced to drink their vapor. The quick comedians Extemporally will stage us, and present Our Alexandrian revels: Give me my robe, put on my crown, I have Immortal longings in me. Yare, yare, good Iras; quick: I see him rouse himself To praise my noble act. I hear him mock The luck of Caesar, which the gods give men To excuse their after wrath. Now to that name my courage prove my title! I am fire, and air; my other elements I give to baser life. So, have you done? Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips. Farewell, kind Charmian, Iras, long farewell. Iras falls and dies. Most probable That so she died: Take up her bed, And bear her women from the monument. She shall be buried by her Antony. No grave upon the earth shall clip in it A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity, than his glory which Brought them to be lamented.

Antony and Cleopatra is not only the stormy love affair between a man and a woman, it also depicts a double vision of the world, two outlooks on life, a twofold way of being. However a closer examination of both words will reveal an underlying significance; on a grammatical point of view, "power" is a noun with a clear semantic meaning and "being" is a verbal noun whose grammatical nature and in particular the -ING ending reveals a more versatile and active nature than the word "power". Therefore both words "power" and "being" convey different aspects such as strength, movement, mental thirst, appetite for life of a single polymorphic concept that our language has not yet created even though it is thoroughly fulfilled by the mind and behaviour of the main characters Antony and Cleopatra. The notions of "Power" and "Being" take a triangular shape in the whole play with three particularly significant elements, politics, love and language. The three pillars of the world represent an image of power - a triumvirate- that has, by definition, to be shared but will, in fact, never be evenly distributed. Lepidus, Caesar and Antony constantly strive against each other for a share of power, not necessarily a fair share as Lepidus will learn rapidly at his expense in the last two acts of the play. The link between the triumvirs - at least between Caesar and Antony- is Octavia, an assumed strong bond if one believes that blood is thicker than water. Antony breaks this bond without giving further explanation to Caesar, his act is merely done for the sake of his own well-being, his life in Egypt. Therefore Octavia, a symbol of vulnerability in her own being -she is a quiet widow- is also a sign of frailty between the two tenants of power. The play covering a period of several years, the rhythm is rather vigorous and it gives to the audience an impression of perpetual shift in power. Maturity is a corollary of power. The main reproach addressed to Caesar, the "barely bearded" man, is about his age. When Caesar refuses a hand to hand fight with Antony, the latter feels offended by this childish antic from his "competitor". In fact, Antony probably resents more this youthful attitude as he can no longer be and live as he used to. Again his thirst for power rules his life. Cleopatra is a leader in love relationships, she seems to have the upper hand from the beginning of her affair with Antony. In that episode, Cleopatra forces Antony into her sphere, he becomes part of her being through her powerful will and doubtless through her seduction skills. However, her reasons to withdraw will remain a mystery. As a matter of fact, she will not even be questioned about them, she will only be criticized for her sudden impulse. One can see in that particular fact a sign of some feminine nature using indirect means to reach absolute power. As opposed to her male opponents, Cleopatra does not give away any sign of thirst for power. However she uses her feminine nature to try and deceive Caesar as an ultimate attempt after surrendering. Her power seems to be effective when Caesar does not even blink as she is caught lying about her personal fortune. Cleopatra will choose death rather than a confined life in Rome where she might become a puppet. She will die with her power of decision still intact, she will not step back even when the clown bringing the "Nile worm" in a basket of figs erroneously promises that the bite of the beast is "immortal". Immortality is what she aims for therefore she will find the power to reach it. It seems that her power comes from her previous mighty lover, as inherited through love. Her power defines her way of being. Egypt is the realm of exuberance where everything is larger than life. Enobarbus and his Roman friends recall huge meals and feasts and the "Egyptian dish" does not only refer to food! The play is written as a chronicle, so several characters are used from the same device, they appear to stop the course of action and either give their personal opinion on facts and people or disclose new information, fragments of life. This matter is fully illustrated in the two messages Caesar receives about Antony, they deliver news about his free behaviour and foolish life in Egypt while Caesar enjoys a life full of resentment in Rome. Together Antony and Cleopatra share this particular likeness in the use of verbal power and similarly this ability will have lethal consequences: Power cannot be shared. Domination is both a human defect and a source of strength. Antony has no more power on Cleopatra than Cleopatra has on Antony, even in the discretion of their chamber, their alliance does not give them more control on one another and despite their amorous partnership they remain two separate powerful entities. Power often implies correlative weakness, however there is no sign of weakness from the part of the characters. Even though they do indulge in pleasure and what may look like trivial occupations to the eyes of reasonable men, they keep control of their life to the very end. As a matter of fact, it gives them sufficient strength to move forward, their being feeds their power and their power will lead them to intentional death. Political power, verbal power and amorous power are interwoven, they thrive on one another and if one element of the triad is weakened, the whole structure collapses. The tale of Antony and Cleopatra is a love story encompassed in a net of intrigues and jealousies that is closing in on them, death is their only dignified way out, it consecrates their power and finally keeps it intact.
