The more a person knows, the better the chances are that they will not only survive, but thrive in a challenging wilderness situation. The Rule of Threes One of the most important concepts in wilderness survival is understanding survival priorities. Modern research brings us the Rule of Threes, a principle that can make the difference between life and death. The Rule of Threes puts our survival needs into perspective, and though they are rough approximations of time, they are an easy way to grasp and remember the order of survival priorities. The Rule of Threes says What the rule of threes shows us is that the most important survival priority is maintaining your core body temperature not getting too cold or hot. The second most important priority is staying hydrated. Food is lowest on the list of priorities, even though your belly may be telling you otherwise. This means that the most important survival needs to attend to first are shelter and water. Unfortunately, these priorities also become apparent when analyzing deaths of persons lost in the wilderness. Most lost persons perish due to hypo- or hyperthermia freezing or overheating , and the second biggest cause of death is dehydration. Now that you know your priorities shelter first, then water, food is last , you are much better prepared to survive. Basic Concepts Native American survival skills, also known as traditional survival wisdom, shows us how our needs can be met if we find ourselves without gear such as tents, sleeping bags, and water purifiers. Shelters can be created with leaves and sticks, fires can be started by creating friction between two dead branches, etc Traditional survival wisdom often comes in the form of stories and lore, as many hunter-gatherer cultures pass down their knowledge from generation to generation through oral traditions. How is wilderness survival related to making works of art? Yes, many hunter-gatherers ornately decorated many of their important tools relating to their survival, such as canoe paddles, grinding bowls, etc. Oral tradition often has a way of containing layers of teachings within teachings. By putting care into what you build, it becomes a work of art, while at the same time increasing its practical value. For example, a hastily built fire-making drill is much less likely to produce fire than an artfully constructed kit, where close attention was paid to each working detail. When I adopted the concept of survival being "making works of art", my shelters ended up being warmer, my fire kits worked better, and I gained a new level of respect for the artfulness of wilderness living. I hope you too will discover the "art" in survival.

Chapter 2 : Apache Karaf | Fabric8 Documentation

This is the guide to the helicopter simulator game "Apache", and features interviews with the developers, the game "cheats" and special hints.

From , when soldiers unjustly hanged some of his relatives, he warred relentlessly against the U. Peace talks in promised him a reservation on his native territory, but after he died his people were removed. Shi-ka-she was a tall man, six feet, with broad shoulders and a commanding appearance. He never met a man his equal with a lance, and, like Crazy Horse, was never photographed. However a California gallery owner named Charles Parker recently uncovered a painting, identified as "Cochise, ", that Apache authority Edwin R. Sweeney says "appears to be the real thing". Both Cochise and Crazy Horse were buried in secret locations on their homeland. In , Cochise, Chief of the Chokonon band of the Chiricahua Apache tribe, was wrongfully suspected of abducting the children of a rancher, and stealing his cattle. Lieutenant George Bascom, who led the investigation, lured Cochise to a meeting. Bascom wasted no time in accusing the Indian of the raid, although the Chief claimed innocence. When Bascom tried to arrest him, Cochise slashed through the tent with his knife and escaped, suffering three bullets wounds in the process. After several weeks of fighting, two dragoon companies out of Fort Breckinridge finally drove the rampaging Apaches into Mexico. But before leaving, they killed their hostages. The Apaches, with bitter vengeance, swept down from their mountain hiding places in more attacks, killing, it is estimated, whites and Mexicans during the next two months. By the end of , the troops had abandoned the forts in Chiricahua country because of the Civil War in the East. Bascom was later killed during battle by a cannonball from the Southern side. On the morning of April 30, , Anglos, Mexicans, and Papago Indian mercenaries attacked a sleeping Indian camp, massacred from 86 to of the innocents, mostly women and children. Of the survivors, women were raped and children carried into slavery. The American President Ulysses S. Howard also finally arranged a meeting with Cochise of the Chiricahuas that autumn, through the intercession of the frontiersman Thomas Jeffords. Cochise was bitter, but he also realized that he fought a battle he could not win. He expressed his resignation in the following way: Their losses have been greater than mine. I have killed ten white men for every Indian slain, but I know that the whites are many and the Indians are few. Apaches are growing less every day". Still the great Chief did not want to get locked up in a Reservation: Why shut me up on a reservation? We will make peace; we will keep it faithfully. But let us go around free as Americans do. Let us go wherever we please". Cochise, who promised Howard to keep order along the pass, proved good as his word, his people lived peaceful until his death in Many have said that he was the most powerful Apache leader in history. At his death, it was reported that his people wailed loudly for more than a day. After his death, the Government broke the historic treaty made with Cochise and in moved the Chiricahua from the ancient mountain homeland to the hot, flat, dry, Arizona desert. Warrior Woman Dahteste pronounced ta-DOT-say Mescalero Apache Dahteste is described as a very beautiful woman who took great pride in her appearance and, even though she married and had children, she chose the life of the warrior. No one challenged Dahteste lightly for it was widely known that she could out-ride, out-shoot, out-hunt, out-run, and out-fight her peers, male and female, and she did so with grace. She was credited as being courageous, daring and skillful, and she took part in battles and raiding parties alongside her husband, and a good friend of her family, Geronimo. Fluent in English, Dahteste became a trusted scout, messenger and mediator between her people and the U. Along with another woman Apache warrior named Lozen, Dahteste was instrumental in the final surrender of Geronimo to the U. Government and, as thanks for her efforts in their behalf, she was imprisoned with Geronimo and shipped to prison with his remaining followers. Dahteste was as strong in her personal spirit as her warrior spirit, and she survived both tuberculosis and pneumonia while imprisoned. Both diseases killed untold thousands of Natives across the land, but not Dahteste. After 8 years in the Florida prison, Dahteste was shipped to the military prison at Ft. After 19 years at Ft. Sill, she was finally given permission to return to her homeland. She lived the balance of her life on the Mescalero Apache Reservation until she died there of old age. More information about Dahteste. Geronimo - Geronimo was the most legendary and feared of all the Apache warriors. To his people he was a very powerful medicine man and shaman that could foretell the future. He was born in present-day Clifton, Arizona with the name Goyahkla, which means "one who yawns. Sill Apaches gave the meaning as "intelligent, shrewd and clever. As he would attack they would yell out the name of their patron saint Jerome. This translated into Geronimo, so he took this as his nickname. One of the first spirit communications he received was shortly after the death of his family in Kaskiyeh. He went to a top of a mountain and heard a voice call his name four times. The voice told him "No gun can ever kill you. I will take the bullets from the guns of the Mexicans, so they will have nothing but powder and I will guide your arrows. Geronimo and hundreds of the Apaches bolted and started a war against the Whites. He surrendered in January and returned to reservation in San Carlos, but the sudden arrest and imprisonment of the Apache warrior Kayatenna, together with rumors of impending trials and hangings, prompted Geronimo to flee on May 17, , with 35 warriors, 8 boys and women. This action induced Geronimo to surrender. At the end, his group consisted of only 16 warriors, 12 women, and 6 children. Because he fought against such daunting odds and held out the longest, he became the most famous Apache of all. Later in life he adopted Christianity and took part in the inaugural procession of President Theodore Roosevelt in Geronimo was wounded many times but never killed by a bullet. After the surrender he and many of the Apache warriors were transported to Florida and never returned to Arizona. This he was never allowed to do, but died as a prisoner of war on February 17, in Ft. More information about Geronimo. Photo taken after her arrest to be taken to prison ? Lozen was the younger sister of the mighty Apache war leader Victorio, and the most famous of the Apache War Women. She learned to ride a horse at age seven and soon became one of the best riders in the band. She loved the rough games of the boys. All of the girls of the band started hard physical training at the age of 8. Their physical endurance would be necessary to survive the harsh way of life they lived. A few women went on raids or with hunting parties to take care of chores and of their husbands, but Lozen took part in the warrior training and never married. When Lozen was born, the leader of the People was a tough, grizzled, canny warrior named Juan Jose Compa. The Chihenne lived then mostly in the Animas Mountains. Some Mexicans came into the area and made friends with them and brought with them slave Indians from other bands and drove those slaves ceaselessly to work in the caves of the earth. Mangas Coloradas liked the golden metal the Mexicans were digging for and also like the mescal that the Mexicans taught them to use, so he made peace with the Mexicans. The warriors profited by trading horses and cattle and other things with the Mexicans. The Mexicans also brought a white man into the area whose name was John James Johnson. Juan Jose led the People to an area to Santa Rita where the Mexicans had barrels of mescal and piles of presents. They watched warily the other white eyes who had bristled hair on their faces. But the whole fiesta scene was a trap and John Johnson shot many of the Indians dead on the spot. They shot even the women and children. Johnson and the other white eyes and Mexicans seized the hair off the heads of the Indians to sell back in Mexico. Mangas Coloradas took charge of the survivors and determined to take revenge on the white eyes and Mexicans and Santa Rita. The People believed in revenge. Over warriors took part in the raids that followed and they killed as many of the white eyes and Mexicans who had taken part in the murder of the People. When the Mexicans and white eyes were captured and brought to camp, the wives, mothers and daughters of the murdered Indians killed the men in revenge. They crushed them under horses hooves, beat them to death with clubs and even hacked them to pieces with knives. This is what Lozen learned as a child. Lozen was quite unlike her counterpart, Dahteste. Lozen had no concern for her appearance and, even though she is in several famous photos of Geronimo with his warriors, there is nothing to indicate that she is a woman. She was manly in her appearance, dressed like a man, lived and fought like a man. She devoted her life to the service of her people. Victorio is quoted as saying, "Lozen is my right hand. She died of tuberculosis at the Mount Vernon Barracks in Mobile, Alabama at the approximate age of More information about Lozen.

Forget about that one. Zynga has kept the name but changed everything else for its latest mobile strategy game, enlisting experienced real-time strategy veterans to create something brand new. A variety of different unit types will unlock as you progress, allowing you to take on increasingly difficult enemies – including boss battles – as you advance. None of those elements are new. What is different is the more active role you have to take directing your forces to attack, as well as some of the thought that goes into defending your own HQ. Both are important, but Supplies probably are slightly more crucial since you need them to build and upgrade structures and defenses. Another good resource management tip for beginners is to favor storage over production. Buildings and defenses that can be upgraded will have a small green arrow below them when they are eligible for improvement. Note that you may need to be a certain level and have the proper resources on hand to perform a particular upgrade. The Troop Tarmac is all you need to produce any of the units you unlock as you advance. Upgrading a Troop tarmac allows it to hold more of any given unit at one time. All defenses have their purposes, but the Domed Defense and Rally Flag can be especially useful. Changing what these defenses are packing is the easiest, most cost-effective way to safeguard your base if you find attacks against your base are repeatedly succeeding in the same manner. On attack missions, timing is everything. Consider the strengths and weaknesses of your units vs. This can be extremely helpful when you are attacking bases for the first time, giving you a chance to test tactics without committing a whole squad at once. To switch between squad and single unit deployment, tap on your HQ and then tap on the helicopter icon that appears on the menu at the bottom of the screen. The most basic of these is the flare, which costs just one point and signals a specific target for your troops to attack. Be prepared to take it on the chin a time or two before you can figure out how to approach the bosses. When picking territories to assault on the world map, pay special attention to the areas you have already cleared but are in danger of falling back into enemy hands. These are marked with an exclamation point and a timer that tells you how quickly you need to act before you lose the stars associated with that region. Make these areas your priority.
