Life[edit] From youth, Singh sought guidance from various sufis , yogis and mystics , but never accepted any of them as a master, and continued to pray to God to obtain a divine inner manifestation. In , he felt that his prayers were answered. During meditations, he began to see the radiant form whom he believed was Guru Nanak , founder of the Sikh religion. In , he met Hazur Sawan Singh , the famous Saint of Beas, in his Ashram on the banks of the Beas River, and in him recognized the luminous form he had seen during the seven previous years. Hazur initiated him into the spiritual discipline, and from then on Singh dedicated his life to reaching the summits of spirituality. From early the s on, when Hazur was asked if he had a disciple who had made great progress, he cited Kirpal Singh. In the same years, on inspiration from his master, Kirpal began writing the "Gurmat Siddhant" "The Philosophy of the Masters" , a two-volume spiritual work, in the Punjabi and Urdu languages. It was published, on Kirpal request, under the name of Hazur Sawan Singh, starting from . In the s, it was published in English in five volumes. On the morning of 12 October , Hazur Sawan Singh entrusted his disciple Kirpal Singh with the work of continuing his spiritual mission. Hazur Sawan Singh died on 2 April , following a brief illness. At the end of this period of intense meditation, Kirpal Singh received an inner command from his master: Kirpal initiated over 80, followers [1] Ruhani Satsang[edit] In Delhi, Kirpal Singh founded his new school of spiritual research and realization, called Ruhani Satsang School of Spirituality or Science of the Soul , which would go on to have branches in many nations of the world. In he built the Sawan Ashram, in the neighborhood of Shakti Nagar on the outskirts of the city, where his spiritual talks satsangs were soon followed by thousands of people. He began to have visits from western disciples. The first was Rusel Jacque, whose account of his six months at the ashram in Gurudev: At the beginning of the sixties, an average 40 to 50 disciples stayed at the ashram from three weeks to six months. He held that position until , and presided over four World Conferences. In , he became the first non-Christian to receive the Order of Saint John of Jerusalem Knights of Malta for his spiritual and humanitarian work. In , he made his first trip abroad to spread his teachings, and spent months in the United States and Europe. It was the first time an Indian spiritual master had visited the West. In those years, Eastern spiritual practices were generally unfamiliar to the West. Singh had hundreds of Westerners initiated and placed on the path of meditation, which he claimed led to contact with the Divine Light and Harmony. In , Singh made his second world tour, this time as president of the World Fellowship of Religions. He met with political leaders and other religious leaders, including Pope Paul VI and the Patriarch of the Eastern Orthodox Churches Atenagora I , and facilitated reconciliation between these two leaders after centuries of separation and misunderstanding. At the same time, he continued to instruct new seekers on the path of the Way of the Masters Sant Mat. On 26 August , Singh conducted his third and final tour of the West, where he received and instructed more than new disciples of the Path of Spirituality. This section does not cite any sources. More than delegates attended, including religious and political leaders from India and around the world. Over , people attended the conference in total. Kirpal Singh left his earthly form on 21 August , at the age of eighty. This was 4 years after the statement issued by Sant Kirpal Singh about his successor. And what Sant Kirpal Singh meant was that his successor would not his initiate his spiritual family. Available teachings[edit] Kirpal Singh wrote an extensive collection of books on spirituality, including The Crown of Life a comparative study of various religions and yogas ; Prayer, Its Nature and Technique; Spirituality: A Study in Yoga â€” Delhi: Ruhani Satsang, ; Franklin, New Hampshire: Sant Bani; Bowling Green, Virginia: Ruhani Satsang; Franklin, New Hampshire:
