At least the fingerprints will be easy to find. A handprint in thick blood is visible on a wall, floor, or some other surface, indicating that the person who left it is seriously injured and possibly dying. The fresher the blood, the stronger the terror. A staple in Zombie Apocalypse films and horror in general. In some cases this is combined with Gory Discretion Shot ; we, the audience, are told there is a corpse in the room, but all we are allowed to see is the blood. This can be worse than a clear sight of the victim , since imagination is left to supply the details. A direct extension is the use of the Bloody Handprint as a symbol, either in framing artwork such as book covers, or in-world. Used in-world it is a classic symbol of savage and violent people, turning up on flags, equipment and uniforms. Further attempts to move to escape or seek help with gore-coated hands will leave a trail behind, since no one that injured is going to waste time washing up. However, the preference for clearly delineated handprints, as opposed to more amorphous smudges, has more to do with communication with the viewer than the logistics of the situation. Edit Just inside the entrance is a unique arrangement of items in the shape of a tower with a chessboard as a base, a small burned book supported by pencils with a coffee mug, an upside down Nuka-Cola and a tin can balanced above it. Touching this arrangement will topple it. Further inside the shelter is a feral ghoul and what appears to be the remains of a lab. Medical supplies are stuck into the face of a damaged garden gnome to form an effigy of the Statue of Liberty, and a trail of plungers go from the floor, up the wall, and onto part of the ceiling, accompanied by bloody handprints. The skeleton of the would-be wall-crawler lies on the floor under the last plunger on the ceiling. A nearby mannequin brandishes more plungers and even wears one as a hat. There are about 50 plungers in the room, including one on the ceiling, which when shot oddly falls over upwards onto the ceiling. This would appear to be because there is an invisible barrier where that plunger is, and the roof has no collision. Thus, the plunger falls on the invisible barrier, and just appears to fall on the ceiling because of perspective. There is a man of plungers on the gurney with a metal helmet for a head and a knife in his crotch. The damaged garden gnome on the desk has a stimpak in his arm, is wearing tortiseshell glasses In-game spelling and has at least 6 Med-X syringes stabbed into his eyes. He is also carrying a dose of jet. Between the doorway and the filing cabinets are two IV stands, each containing a blood pack. Exterior Edit There is a small Talon Company outpost situated to the west around an abandoned truck and usually is comprised of a single Talon merc and a level dependent robot escort. There is also a super mutant camp to the east and an Enclave drop off point on the bridge. Notable loot 1 mini nuke in the small camp to the east. The "Statue of Liberty" damaged garden gnome has Med-X sticking out of his eyes and ears. There is a large head of a statue accompanied by an American flag near the entrance of the shelter. Based on available evidence within the shelter and elsewhere, it was a Civil Defense Administration shelter specially intended for use by the National Catastrophe Relief Auxiliary as a first aid post in wartime. Appearances This shelter appears only in Fallout 3. Gallery Bloody hand prints and plunger wall climb Statue at shelter entrance.

What gruesome party couldn't use a few bloody handprints with drops of blood on the walls or windows as a decoration? These easy-to-make clings stick on windows, mirrors, or any other glass or plastic surface and they're cheap, too!

Evelyn 13 months ago Do you have to use the white base, or can you just use the red mixture? Kristi Could I just put the blood colored glue on without using their hands? FatBoyThin My roommate and I sometimes use them just whenever to confuse our guests. Jordan The clear base only needs to dry to the touch before the red layer is added. What an interesting idea. This would be fun. Jordan 3 years ago Does the base need to dry completely translucent before adding the red layer of paint? Thanks for your time. Thanks for these creative instructions! Colin Garrow 3 years ago from Kinneff, Scotland Ooh! Wonderfully gory, and what an easy way to turn your home into a crime scene. Then you can finish cleanup with warm soapy water. What a lot of blood - love it! Thanks for teaching me this. The Reminder 3 years ago from Canada Great hub thanks! Two bloody handprints up! The dye will come right off glass surfaces with a bit of glass cleaner. Jen 3 years ago With the first layer of plain glue, does it look much different than the top with the coloured glue? Like if I wanted to put these on the glass on our front door, if I put them on the inside of the door with the bottom plain layer being the first thing you see when you walk up, can you tell there is a plain layer at all? Or is it completely translucent? I hope that question makes sense! I really wish the reply function threaded comments to the comment they are written in response to! I would never take your take your work! Pirating or plagiarize is such a bad thing to do. However, please do not cut and paste the text or images. Kylee Howells 3 years ago This is great! With credit to you and a link to your blog of course. I have pinned it to my "Halloween Decor" board at <https://> Billie 3 years ago I made a couple clings to try it out. When I first took them off they stuck to the window. The next day I went to put them on again and they no longer stick. Am I doing something wrong? Or are they a one time use? Thank you for your help. A great suggestion and you certainly know what goes. June Parker 4 years ago from New York This is so cool. This particular homemade glue would definitely not be as translucent when it dried and, while the sugar might make it a little hygroscopic, I doubt it would hold enough moisture to keep the flexibility that allows the clings to work well. Monique Could this be made with homemade glue? Ashley 4 years ago Hey! This is really cool. Does this stuff stain surfaces like the regular gel clings? Courtney Cole 4 years ago When will I know when the base is dry enough? Making them right now and base has been drying for about 40 minutes Corrinna Johnson 4 years ago from BC, Canada Love this idea! I will have to try to make these this year. Great tutorial and awesome instructions. Anything that would change the texture of the dried glue might interfere with its ability to stick to slick surfaces. The only way to find out is to try it. You could mix up a tiny bit and see how it works out. Jessica Do you think you could use washable craft paint instead of food coloring? I left a small one on my bathroom mirror for a few months. If they get dry and start to fall off, you can refresh them by peeling them off, putting them on plastic wrap or waxed paper, and letting them sit in the bathroom while you take a steamy shower. Courtney Cole 4 years ago How long do they stick to stuff for? Like if I made them at the beginning of october, would they still be sticking to my window by Halloween? If anything, they tend to get brittle over time. If they did melt and stick to the wax paper, you could probably pop them into a refrigerator for a few minutes and get them loose. Helen 4 years ago just curious. When you put it between the wax paper and store it, In the summer if it is to hot, would the glue melt? Ruthi 5 years ago What fun! I like the idea of bloody Halloween hand prints. Thanks for great instructions on how to make the handprint clings! CharMarie 5 years ago What a great idea!
