Chapter 1 : Business Success Quotes (quotes)

Celebrating Success! Fourteen Ways to a Successful Company by Ronald Finklestein, is an extremely insightful book on what are the elements in a successful company.

You have a list of goals. You listen to all the podcasts that showcase amazingly successful people. You read all the books that show how to be the absolute most productive. Yet you still feel like you are not doing enough, not accomplishing enough, not successful enough, not productive enough, not growing enough. I am trying here!?! Because it is simply not the truth of the matter. We tend to get stuck in the mindset of overcoming challenges and obstacles instead of celebrating successes. As business owners, we are always striving to be better. This means putting unrealistic expectations on ourselves and our business. It also means that we tend to forget how far we have come and how much we have accomplished. Take time to look back on where you started, identify the progress, and celebrate your wins. Celebrating success is especially important because your company is constantly changing, evolving, and growing. Here are some key reasons you need to actively celebrate your successes: Celebrating your successes changes your mindset. Whatever we want to change, achieve, or have more of – be it money, health, fitness, romance, happiness – a success mindset lies at the heart of it. Developing this success mindset requires cultivation and continual practice. While techniques like affirmations and visualization can play a part, celebrating your success is another tool for cultivating a success mindset. Celebrate every success, no matter how small the win, to cultivate your success mindset. Acknowledging your successes builds up your confidence and motivates you to keep moving forward. Motivation is like a muscle. You need to practice strengthening it through a regular routine. Celebrating your successes can be part of the routine that strengthens your motivation. Celebrating gives a boost of encouragement to those around you, like your team, your business partner, or your family. Often this will motivate them to want to share in your successes, which then leads to more successes! Celebrating your successes is the best vehicle to help you learn and grow. You can identify what is working and why. If you never stop to celebrate, these things that are working well, whether big or small, often get missed. It might be a success that you consider tiny that will start you down the path to even greater and bigger successes in the future.

Grow 3 Reasons Celebrating Your Many Accomplishments Is Critical To Your Success Celebrating your wins not only feels great physically, but it reinforces the positive attitude and behavior you want to show up when you face a new challenge or opportunity. Getty Images When was the last time you took time out of your busy schedule to acknowledge let alone celebrate your many accomplishments? As entrepreneurs, we spend a lot of time obsessing about the future. Yet, when we complete a significant goal, we have been conditioned to immediately move onto the next goal rather than celebrating our wins. In a previous article, I had interviewed Mr. Pena regarding Taking Action on Great Advice. Known by many as The 50 Billion Dollar Man, Dan Pena is a shining example of someone who has worked hard, accomplished a tremendous amount personally and professionally, has given back through both philanthropic and educational means, and knows how to celebrate his many accomplishments with his friends and family members. Here are three reasons why celebrating your wins is so critically important to your success. So much of what we do in our business is driven or limited by our psychology. Celebrating your wins not only feels great physically, but it reinforces the behavior you want to show up when you face a new challenge or opportunity. Simply put, the lack of celebration will lead to a feeling of emptiness that will result in less focus and decreased performance over time. For three days and nights, Mr. Pena combined physical events such as golf, skeet shooting and Scottish line dancing with choreographed speeches, toasts and storytelling. As guests were interacting with one another i. It was incredible to both experience and witness these interactions. There are many psychological and physiological benefits in simply acknowledging your wins either in a journal or with a close friend or family member. But, there are added benefits when you expand your circle to include your colleagues and business partners. While in a peak state of celebration, you have the added benefit of strengthening your business network with those around you. Your own celebration is contagious and those around you want to share in your success. As accomplishments are properly recounted, new ideas and opportunities are formed and shared. In a peak state, you feel you can accomplish anything. The environment was buzzing with peer collaboration and a strong desire to support each other. As you look to grow your business, celebratory events not only reinforce the positive aspects of what you are doing, but positions your business correctly as a desirable company with which others would like to associate. As you celebrate your wins, others look for ways to participate in what you have successfully built. The right partnerships are formed via a value-for-value exchange. Many of whom recounted Mr. It was an incredible experience to witness how such a successful person like Dan Pena celebrates his half-century long career. We should all be so fortunate to celebrate our 70th birthday party with our highly successful peer group and supportive family. If you are willing to Take Action on Great Advice, then you are already on the path that will take you to a similar outcome. Aug 12, More from Inc.

Chapter 3 : Why Your Company Should Celebrate More

Fourteen Ways to a Successful Company and coauthored The Platinum Rule to Small Business Success. He founded The Business Leadership Association, co-founded Celebrating Success! The Greater Akron Business Conference (<http://blog.quintoapp.com>).

MindaZetlin Do you know what success looks like, and will you recognize it if you get there? I read an essay of mine out loud for broadcast on the local public radio station. So when I got the chance to broadcast my essay about the use or overuse? Then I recorded take after take. My husband, Bill, a musician with recording experience, lent me a digital recorder and coached me. When the evening came for the piece to be broadcast, we sat in our living room, listening intently. As soon as it was done, we dove right into our critique. Bill planned some technical changes for next time as well, and suggested I shorten the pauses between my sentences. Though all I could hear were the flaws, they thought it sounded great. I had fulfilled a long-time dream and not even paused to enjoy it. I do that kind of thing way too often. Striving is good, but never being satisfied is bad. I believe it is. Maybe this is how to get there: Set small goals as well as big ones. You have to have a grand vision for what you and your company can achieve. Or maybe entering three new markets. The point is to set a goal that you can achieve in the short term. Then celebrate when you reach one. Whenever you hit one of those benchmarks, stop for a while to enjoy that fact. Give yourself and your company a day off. Go to a ball game or have a party. If you and your employees all know that each step along the way will be an occasion to have fun, both you and they will be that much more motivated to get to the next achievement. In addition to celebrating achievements within your company, let the world know. It will raise your profile, which is always a good thing. Besides, the surest way to see that your accomplishments get the recognition they deserve is to begin by recognizing them yourself. Think back to where you started. What did you hope to achieve? An entrepreneur friend and I were discussing how neither one of us seems to have enough time and we both feel overwhelmed. That really helped put things in perspective. Astronauts, Presidents, and billionaire entrepreneurs all have unfulfilled dreams. So will you and I. We might wind up waiting forever. Think beyond your career. It will end someday, although none of us likes to think about that. When that day comes, will you look back on a time that you enjoyed as much as you could? Or will you just remember a collection of moments trying to get where you wanted to go next? So the next time I reach a goal or get to do something I really care about, I plan to make sure that I stop long enough to savor the moment. Apr 8, Like this column?
