View Larger Image Bulletin Boards with Flair A bulletin board can act as a powerful teaching tool, or it can merely sit there as a pathetic contrivance. You might welcome the challenge of designing a bulletin board, and always create exciting boards that students love. Then again, you might dread the task, and procrastinate until you simply have to throw something at that blank expanse. Love or hate the task, you will not escape the fact that your bulletin board is a bold advertisement. It tells students about you and about your lesson material. Design a bulletin board with flair, and you will more easily sell both yourself and your subject matter. Students will automatically attribute to you and your teaching the flair of the bulletin board, so you will get better results. You must follow through with quality in other areas, of course, but begin with bulletin boards that have flair. Character education bulletin boards are especially important, since they sell traits that influence every discipline of teaching, every area of life, and every day from cradle to grave. Few other subjects could so demand a bulletin board with flair. The same rule applies to bulletin boards. Place a stunning bulletin board in a great location, and it will draw students as honey draws flies. Place the same bulletin board in a poor location, and it will garner little or no attention. You will get top results with bulletin boards in high traffic locations. Choose a place where students will find it easy to get to the board and see it. Bulletin Board Theme Imagine reading a book that lacks plot. Imagine listening to music without a melody. We respond to plots and melodies and to themes. We appreciate organization in life, whether we ourselves have learned to create it or not. Bulletin board themes organize your message. Like plots and melodies, they make it easier to follow what you are trying to convey. Seasonal or holiday themes can be linked to specific character traits, but exercise creativity and craft exciting stand-alone themes, too. Eye-Catching Bulletin Boards While substance must never be sacrificed, bulletin boards need to catch and hold eyes. They need to grab attention and hold it. Your bulletin boards must compete with babble, music, texting, twittering, and a host of other distractions. Use bright colors to captivate and make students pause for a longer look. Tie those colors into your theme. Three-Dimensional Bulletin Boards Bulletin boards can take on flair and style with three-dimensional objects. A number of size-appropriate boxes can become building blocks, labeled with various character traits. Tack or staple them to the board to form a three-dimensional wall. I mean things you see that are attractive and entertaining, but make no demands on your brain. All they provide is brief entertainment. Never produce such bulletin boards. Bulletin boards with flair challenge brains to think. Your character education bulletin board might pose a question: Will it make an ongoing difference in the life of even one student? Have I created a truly life-changing bulletin board? If your bulletin boards will do nothing to transform at least one student to some degree, leave them blank. Bulletin boards with outward flair, especially character education bulletin boards, are meaningless if they accomplish nothing. Your bulletin boards can advertise you as a teacher who believes character is vital. They can advertise character as the highly desirable commodity it is. You can use that advertising to sell yourself as a person of character. You can sell traits that influence mathematics, science, history, language, and every other discipline. You can sell character that improves every area of life, every day from cradle to grave. You begin by creating bulletin boards with the proper kind of flair. Free Bulletin Board Elements.

I started it a few years ago after one of those "internal struggles" we all have while starting to get our classrooms ready for the new school year, which went something like this Okay, so school starts in a week, and Meet-the-Teacher-Night is a week after that. And these walls look really I know that eventually I will add to the walls: I guess I could hang up a bunch of these store-bought parts-of-speech posters left in the cabinet by the previous teacher, at which zero of my kids will ever look. Hmm, what to do, what to do. So, at the intersection of the aversion to throwing things up on the wall just to fill the space and the urge to fill the walls with something, I created a "reserved" poster. The "reserved" poster is a simply-printed, single sheet of paper that I pinned to the empty bulletin board, showing students and visitors that the lack of "stuff" on the board was intentional. One thing true about the classrooms at my school is the enormous amount of bulletin board space. Parents no longer try to interpret the bare walls: Did he not have enough time to get his classroom ready? Does he have time management issues? Has the class done nothing the first week of school? Or does he have an ultra-minimal design style? I officially give you permission to start the year with some of your bulletin boards bare. And maybe all of them! Click HERE to download my "reserved" signs. I made a couple of versions for you, including black-and-white. Hopefully they lessen your classroom-decorating stress level! They make a fun back-to-school bulletin board! The Who Am I? Whether your boards are bare or full, I hope you have a great beginning of the year! Although I make many music bulletin boards duh! I also have made quite a few bulletin boards about character education. Pictures were printed to the copier in the workroom to save the expense of having the photos printed at a photo lab. This was quite an attention grabber! On the snowballs are things that are coming up in the semester and things that students need to keep working on: I must admit that birds kind of freak me out a little bit. This owl themed bulletin board is easy enough for me to take. I think that when I display it again, I may create some paper trees for these hooters to sit on. You can get this board HERE. BEE Respectful There are three beehives on the board. One says "Respect Yourself. Around the beehives are little bumblebees that explain what the hives mean. For examp around the "Respect Others" beehive the bees say "their ideas", "their space", "their family", "their successes" and so on. The board was covered with blue paper and an aquatic border. Each student in the school was represented by a fish with their name on it. It was quite an impressive display and the students loved finding their names and the names of their friends. Be an Angel I love Kindergarten art! The teachers and staff were such good sports! For this bulletin board they put on a fake beard and eyebrows to match their Abraham Lincoln hat. This was great for showing the students that there are great role models around them every day. This cute bulletin board helps remind students how to be less sticky and icky. The little hearts that make the border for this display say things like "So sorry. Check these out these boards. You can also download Patch of Politeness for free.
