How to improve your Chinese pronunciation 1. Master the basic rules of pronunciation and tones. As a beginner, the most important thing is be familiar with all pinyin sounds, spelling rules and tone changing rules. There are many learning experiences sharing about how to improve your Chinese pronunciation. Regarding the tones, besides the regular tones practice, there are some learners who share their methods like mastering without using tone marks. Gradually you can connect all the words and figure out what they are talking about. There are tons of online learning resources well, surely you can find them at Dig Mandarin. Sometimes, the learning content is a little bit tedious, afterwards you can find some Chinese songs to perfect your accent. Also, learning from movies and TV shows is also a great way to train your sense of the language, and know more about Chinese culture as well.

Having Enough output i. There is phonetic change in the flow of speech, especially the tones. When you first begin to study Mandarin Chinese pronunciation, it is beneficial to practice pairs of tones. This phrase uses the second then the third tone. Say this phrase out loud several times and listen for the tone and rhythm of the syllables. Studying this natural rhythm of the language will help you pronounce new words you come across. Also, the increased accuracy of your Mandarin pronunciation will help you say sentences more smoothly. The start is of course tough, however after going through it; the longer sentences will be much easier for you. Slow down and be clear Pay attention that you do not speak too fast. But you are just a beginner who might not pronounce the standard sound. Speed is the last thing you should care about. Make your sounds clear and correct. After all, a successful communication is the goal and accuracy is the most important thing. Practice makes perfect As we mentioned above, you need to cultivate a keen sense of Chinese language by enough input. Some when you are practice by yourself and not with others, you are creating the illusion that you are speaking Chinese well. The truth might be only you yourself can understand or of course your teacher can guess what you are trying to say exactly. So the only key is practice, practice and practice. Learn from your mistakes As you know, Chinese people are very kind, so encouragement and compliment will be the main trend of their comments to your speaking. Confidence is necessary, but their kindness is not your reason to ignore the mistakes and your foreign pronunciation. Ask your Chinese friends to point out your inaccuracy and specific problems directly. Then take down the notes of your common mistakes and analyze them one by one. This process will help you conquer your problems. It may be discouraging sometimes to hear about so many mistakes, but you will learn a lot from them quickly and it will help you to improve much faster than you think. You also can observe if other people understand you. Regardless their kindness, understanding is a good start anyhow. In addition you can try to prepare a paragraph on a specific topic, then record your own speech. Then ask your Chinese friends or teacher help you checking it. Adjusting and improving your pronunciation is what you can do naturally. Focusing on the difficulties and repeat it slower. Just make sure you are pronouncing the right way. Review all the time Acquiring accurate pronunciation is a long-term battle. Record all your mistakes and misunderstanding of some specific concepts. Review your notes from time to time. It will call your attention and remind you the right way you should act. One day you will finally master them all. How to Learn Mandarin as a Beginner Last updated: May 13, Learn Chinese If this is your first attempt at learning the Chinese language, then whether you intend to learn by yourself or find a teacher, there is a great learning way you can use to help you how to learn Mandarin Chinese as beginner. Before trying to learn some new words, you need to practice pronunciation for about 15 lessons. The system of Chinese pronunciation is very different from English. When you learn English, you need to learn the pronunciation of each word one by one, but in Chinese, after you have practiced for about one month, you can read any word in the dictionary as long as there is Pinyin written above it. So what is Pinyin?. Below is an example: There is no Pinyin in Chinese books. Pinyin only helps people to read Chinese characters. Every Chinese character has a basic meaning, and two or three Chinese characters can make a word when put together. It would be best to find a professional teacher to help you practice. One initial and one final can be put together, adding a tone to make a syllable. There are five tones in Chinese: Even as a beginner, you can speak out the sounds of initials and finals very well by watching Chinese teaching videos, but you still need a teacher to help you practice tones. Practicing tones is the most important thing you need to do. Words are always made of two or three Chinese characters, so there will always be two or three syllables in each word. The third tone drops down and then rises. When you pronounce a single third tone, it just drops down and then rises. But in a word, if a third tone precedes another third tone, you only need to pronounce the rising part, omitting the dropping down part. When the third tone precedes other rest tones, correspondingly, you only need to pronounce the dropping down part. People have a habit of only pronouncing the dropping down part of the third tone when the third tone is at the end of a word, phrase or sentence. So you will find that, in most situations, you only need to pronounce the dropping down part of the third tone. After practicing pronunciations of words, you can start to practice reading short sentences. Right now, just focus on the pronunciation. When you finish this step successfully, congratulations! You are ready to learn regular lessons. You will learn words first, then grammar, then read passages. You should be proud that you can read out any Chinese words with Pinyin correctly now. If you have any problem on how to learn Mandarin? Just please leave your comment.

Kendra Schaefer My personal site I live in: But this collection might help you keep your skills fresh, practice recognizing sentence structure, or pick up the occasional new vocabulary word. The Story After spending a few years China studying Mandarin and working, I took a several-year hiatus and returned to my native country. It was alarming how quickly my language skills began disintegrating. I searched online for Chinese reading materials, and though I found plenty of dictionaries and flash card sources, I had a very difficult time finding something that was at an appropriate reading level, was different than the typical textbook-y stuff available online, was presented in a way that was easy to read, and that I was sure I could get through. I ended up spending more time looking for something that was suitable than actually doing any reading. I post whenever I get a chance. This is more and more true the higher your reading level. This is because for any story, article or essay to really take shape, it usually must involve some intermediate grammar or intermediate vocabulary. This is why most truly beginner textbooks stick to dialogs as opposed to actual articles. I will classify something as beginner if at least a couple of the following criteria are met: Intermediate I classify something as intermediate if: The language is intermediate or upper-intermediate. There are some light idioms. I classify something as advanced if: It contains many specialized or technical words technology, health, beauty, geography, etc. It contains high-level structures, like newspaper-y or literary writing styles. It contains any archaic words. The sentence structure is very complicated. It contains a lot of modern slang. Enjoy, and good luck with your studies.
