Burt only sells locally. He is retiring, is selling everything in his lot, and is willing to make deals to clear it out. He is located in Eugene, OR. Some of us have managed to fall in love with all sorts of powered machinery in our lives. Like with so many things appliances, etc , today most consumer riding mowers are made by just a handful of companies. Or this very husky Bolens, which had a rep for making tough machines. Genuine gear and shaft drive to the rear wheels; no belts here, except to the mower. Wheel Horse is also a pioneering brand, from at least the early fifties, when the growth of suburbia opened up a big new market for riding mowers. Something a bit more modest: It looks to have been likely built by one of the mass-producers of lower end equipment, either MTD or Murray. An Allis Chalmers, to go along with your big AC farm tractor. I suspect it was built by someone else, a very common practice in this business; then and now. Inside the fence, its a bit of a jumble. Lots of John Deeres, including this , a direct descendent of the first JD garden tractor, the legendary from Kohler engines were used, and they deserved their rep as being the best of their kind. It was a new-ish suburban hospital, and a giant expanse of lawn. That did not endear me to the boss. IH beat JD into the garden equipment market, with their original cub Cadet from The first three years of them had a belt drive to the transmission, but was then re-engineered to have direct drive, using the transmission from the larger four-cylinder Cub. Those Cub Cadets had a superb rep too. More recent John Deeres are Burts mainstay, in terms of sales. A view of more machines, including a couple of Hondas the two red ones behind the one in front. A colorful collection of garden tractors, featuring a wide range of styling gimmicks. Fairbanks-Morse was one of the most storied industrial pioneers and giants, dating back to In the post-war era, FM expanded into consumer products, including a line of riding mowers. This is a rather unusual machine, with its single powered wheel in the back. And its mechanical arrangement is rather different too. But the original round drive belt for propulsion is still there, looking a bit frayed. Good luck finding a replacement! That takes power to the rear, where a rather complicated arrangement with a second vee belt, which has an idler to act as a clutch, and then finally a chain drive to the rear wheel. And it even has a tow hitch. David Bradley was another pioneering manufacturer of small self-propelled tractors and farm equipment. Their new Suburban line of garden tractors came out in the latter fifties, and was soon picked up by Sears, which sold it as their Suburban. Sears was and still is a big source of riding mowers, and their Suburban line was highly regarded. Back in those days, 10hp was about as powerful as it got in these machines. The early John Deeres and Cub Cadets started out with 7 and 8hp engines. FMC was another American industrial company that went through a lot of changes since its founding in The Bolens line was also eventually swallowed up by MTD. Another view, although some of you are probably more interested in that police-spec CV for sale next door. See anything that catches your fancy? I understand about thatâ€¦ Note:
