Chapter 2 : A Cry from the Streets () - movie review on The Movie Scene

CRY OF THE STREETS. by Joel Vicente. Inspired by the countless faces of people we minister to. These are the unheard voices of the streets. The Cry of the Streets.

It is possible that Solomon may have originally meant in this passage only to describe, in highly poetic language, the influence and work in their generation of those in whom "the fear of the Lord" dwells. So, too, many of the Psalms Psalms 45, for example , in the first instance it would seem, are intended to describe the excellence of some earthly saint or king, yet they are completely fulfilled only in the Son of man, the ideal of all that is noblest and best in man. And thus the description of Wisdom in her manifold activity, as represented in Proverbs 1, 8, 9, so closely corresponds to the work of our Lord, as depicted in the New Testament, that from the earliest times of Christianity these passages have been held to be a prophecy of Him; and there is good reason for such a view. For a comparison of Luke Paul in like manner speaks of Him as the "Wisdom of God" 1Corinthians 1: For passages from the Fathers embodying this view, see references in Bishop Wordsworth on this chapter. Pulpit Commentary Verses Address of Wisdom personified, exhibiting the folly of those who wilfully reject, and the security of those who hearken to, her counsels. The sacred writer, in this section, as also in ch. Wisdom is represented as speaking and as addressing the simple, scorners, and fools. The address itself is one of the noblest specimens of sacred eloquence, expressing in rapid succession the strongest phases of feeling - pathetic solicitude with abundant promise, indignant scorn at the rejection of her appeal, the judicial severity of offended majesty upon offenders, and lastly the judicial complacency which delights in mercy towards the obedient. The imagery in part is taken from the forces of nature in their irresistible and overwhelming violence and destructive potency. The Hebrew word khochmoth here used to designate Wisdom seems to be an abstract derivation from the ordinary khochmah. The form is peculiar to the Proverbs and Psalms, in the former occurring four times Proverbs 1: As in Proverbs 9: The feminine form may be determined by the general law which associates purity and serenity with womanhood Plumptre. The idea of plurality, however, is not that of extension, but of comprehension, i. The plural form of the word denotes the highest character or excellence in which wisdom can be conceived; or, as the marginal reading expresses it, wisdoms, i. Other instances of the pluralis excellentiae are met with in Holy Writ, e. In the conception of Wisdom here presented to us in the text we have the germ of an idea which, on the principles of expansion, developed subsequently in the consciousness of the Christian Church into a definite identification of Wisdom with the Second Person of the blessed Trinity. There is a striking parallel to this passage in Luke Again, a striking similarity is observable between the teaching of Divine Wisdom and that of the Incarnate Word, as much in their promises as in their threats and warnings. But it is difficult to determine with accuracy to what extent the Messianic import of the personification was present to the consciousness of the sacred writers, and whether Wisdom as here presented to us is simply a poetic and abstract personification or a distinct by-postatizing of the Word. On the other hand, a large number of expositors, dating from the earliest periods of the Christian Church down to the present time, see in Wisdom a distinct hypostasis, or person - the Lord Jesus Christ. A fuller investigation of this subject will be seen in our remarks on ch. For the present we observe that Wisdom is essentially Divine. Her authority, her utterances, whether of promise, threat, scorn, or vengeance, are the authority, the utterances, of God. Crieth; rather, crieth loudly, or aloud. In such a way does Wisdom cry without when making her address. She elevates her voice that all may hear. The writer here begins his enumeration of the five places wherein Wisdom preaches, viz. She uttereth her voice; or, causeth her voice to be heard; represented in the Vulgate by dat vocem suam. The instrumentality which Wisdom uses in her public preaching are the prophets and teachers Ecclus. The same places are indicated in Luke The Syriac reading, in compitis, gives a different sense, as compitum, equivalent to "crossroads. Christ himself is Wisdom, is Wisdoms. Three sorts of persons are here called by Him: Sinners are fond of their simple notions of good and evil, their simple prejudices against the ways of God, and flatter themselves in their wickedness. Proud, jovial people, that make a jest of every thing. Scoffers at religion, that run down every thing sacred and serious. Those are the worst of fools that hate to be taught, and have a rooted dislike to serious godliness. The precept is plain; Turn you at my reproof. We do not make a right use of reproofs, if we do not turn from evil to that which is good. The promises are very encouraging. Men cannot turn by any power of their own; but God answers, Behold, I will pour out my Spirit unto you. Special grace is needful to sincere conversion. But that grace shall never be denied to any who seek it. The love of Christ, and the promises mingled with his reproofs, surely should have the attention of every one. It may well be asked, how long men mean to proceed in such a perilous path, when the uncertainty of life and the consequences of dying without Christ are considered? Now sinners live at ease, and set sorrow at defiance; but their calamity will come. Now God is ready to hear their prayers; but then they shall cry in vain. Are we yet despisers of wisdom? Let us hearken diligently, and obey the Lord Jesus, that we may enjoy peace of conscience and confidence in God; be free from evil, in life, in death, and for ever.

History[edit] Pottery seller, from a series of the "Cries of Naples" in Capodimonte porcelain , c. However, the numbers of street vendors working in urban areas increased markedly from the 17th century. The displacement of the open market prompted large numbers of street vendors and itinerant traders to fill the gap in food distribution by providing inexpensive produce in small quantities to the working classes, who for their part, worked long hours in arduous occupations leaving them no time to attend markets situated away from the city centre. This led to a large increase in the informal and unregulated trade carried out by street vendors. The number of street vendors increased again in the early 18th century, following the industrial revolution, as many dislocated workers gravitated to the larger urban centres in search of work. As the city population increased, the number of street vendors also increased. Around the same time, these criers or street vendors filled the streets of other European cities including Paris, Bologna and Cologne. Initiatives to eradicate street trading had occurred intermittently in the past; various attempts to curtail street-based trading had been known during the reigns of Elizabeth I and Charles I. Street traders composed their own broadsides in which they asserted their own political identity in songs. However, he finds that he cannot afford justice, and is soon relieved of his money through his dealings with street sellers, retailers, tavern-keepers and others. A lyckpeny or lickpenny is an archaic term for anything that soaks up money. Such tunes became very popular in the 17th century. The lyrics show the fish vendor, Molly Malone, chanting "cockles and mussels, alive, alive, oh". The tune may have been based on an earlier 17th or 18th century song. Individual artworks were frequently named after the street cry that typified different types of street vendor. It was a mid to late 16th century series of woodcuts, illustrating a book which Pepys had catalogued as "Cryes consisting of Several Setts thereof, Antient and Moderne: Embellished with sixty-two elegant cuts ; [28] a highly popular publication with a new edition published in and in its tenth edition by Other 18th century titles included: The Cries of London: Some of these titles include: Ancient and Modern, In the mid s, the English water-colourist, Paul Sandby created a series entitled London Cries depicting English shopkeepers, stall-holders and itinerant street vendors. The Dutch engraver, Marcellus Laroon began working in London in the mids where he produced his most famous work, the series, The Cryes of London. Grenadier cigarettes also produced a two sets entitled Street Cries, one in and another in the post-war period.
