Reviewed by Wayne S. Walker For more information e-mail homeschoolbookreview gmail. This is an early Honey, I Shrunk the Kids type of story. Danny Dunn is an eleven-year-old boy who likes to experiment. One day while Danny is up on the roof of the house experimenting with parachutes, he and his friends, Joe Pearson, who is pet sitting Mrs. Danny concludes that the Professor is working on a secret government job and that spies are out to get him. They even find a matchbook dropped by the men watching the Professor. They use Cecil to track the Professor and find that he has gone to a red barn in the country. They also find the strange man who had followed him hiding behind a maple tree outside the barn. That evening, Danny tries to warn the Professor, but he laughs it off. Then they find leather case that the Professor left behind which contained tiny keys. What is the secret project? Is it small aliens, as Danny thinks? Or is it a transporter so that the Professor can go to another planet of small aliens, as Irene suggests? The next day, the three children and Cecil return to the barn to protect the Professor. What will happen to them and the Professor when they accidentally switch on his latest invention? However, I had never heard of Danny Dunn. There is little objectionable. The Professor smokes a pipe, and a few euphemisms golly, gosh, and gee appear. All in all, I enjoyed reading the book and being introduced to an older series for young people that was previously unknown to me.
