

Chapter 1 : Danny Means Trouble (Sweet Valley Twins, #40) by Francine Pascal

This is a story that I have very mixed feelings about. A new boy comes to school, Danny, and starts right off causing a lot of trouble in his classes. He gets into an actual fight but is not suspended. He just happens to be on the track team and is the best person on that team, and there's a big.

Share this story Warning: Major spoilers for Season 2 are below. The writing is better, the fight scenes are better, and the characters and relationships are more fully developed. When we last saw Danny Rand Finn Jones, Game of Thrones in Luke Cage S2, he seemed more centered, less bratty, and suitably chastened by the apparent death of one of his fellow Defenders. But there is tension: Danny still struggles with impulse control when wielding the Iron Fist, while Colleen has hung up her katana altogether to pursue a path of peace. The destruction of the powerful crime syndicate known as the Hand in Defenders has left a leadership void in the Chinatown underworld, and war is brewing as two factions battle for control. He and Danny were raised together as brothers, eventually battling it out for the right to face the dragon and win the Iron Fist. When Davos succeeds, Danny must grapple with what the loss of his power means for his sense of identity while figuring out how to get the Iron Fist back. Season 1 was deeply flawed, with a meandering plot, bad pacing, and so many antagonists it was difficult to keep them all straight, never mind feel any emotional investment in their fates. There are a lot of narrative threads, but the writers keep them tightly connected to the overall arc. Netflix If Danny desires the Iron Fist to fill some deep emotional void, Davos was raised to view it as his birthright. His mother was not the warm, nurturing type. There are moments of vulnerability: But there is nobody he will not sacrifice to achieve his end, even innocent civilians, who are simply collateral damage in his eyes. That mix of righteous zealotry, entitlement, and ruthless cruelty, with no tempering compassion, proves a disastrous combination when coupled to the mighty power of the Iron Fist, which reflects the character of the wielder. Danny struggled to wield it responsibly; Davos is pure vengeance. His fist glows red as blood, whereas for Danny it glows a warm yellow. He suggests he did so because he rightly feared what Davos would become if given such power. The execution of the fight scenes has improved dramatically, perhaps because the main cast members had more time to train before shooting. So there is less need for all those annoying rapid jump cuts that detracted so much from the choreography in the first season. Henwick is particularly impressive, both in execution of the moves and in her overall bearing. And she has great chemistry with Missick; I would totally watch a crime-fighting show featuring Colleen Wing and Misty Knight as rogue vigilantes. But the pace quickens after Davos steals the Iron Fist via a mystical ceremony involving a rare Tibetan singing bowl, an ancient corpse, and a very unsanitary tattoo inking and starts sowing carnage in his single-minded quest to "cleanse" New York City. The last three episodes boast genuine suspense, lots of butt-kicking, and one very clever twist. Rather than take the Iron Fist back himself, Danny convinces someone else to take it, ceding his power until he can learn more about its origin. In the end, the person least hungry for power proves to be the best candidate to wield it for now. So where does that leave Danny Rand? He goes on a quest through Asia in search of answers to the many mysteries surrounding the Iron Fist.

Early life[ edit ] By his own account, Bonaduce grew up in a dysfunctional family and suffered severe physical and emotional abuse at the hands of his father, TV writer and producer Joseph Bonaduce. In the show, the Partridges were a family band that toured the country in their hip, Mondrian -inspired, painted school bus. Danny Partridge played bass guitar for the band and his younger siblings, Tracy and Chris, contributed to the band as percussionists. The series ran for four seasons, from to and, in , Bonaduce was honored by the Young Artist Foundation with its Former Child Star "Lifetime Achievement" Award for his role on the series. The single from the album, "Dreamland" was a minor hit. Perhaps the most memorable of his films was Corvette Summer starring Mark Hamill. Hamill and Bonaduce played high school students who went in search of a stolen customized Corvette Stingray. Bonaduce also made guest appearances on several TV shows, including the television action drama CHiPs. His career withered in the early s. In his autobiography, Bonaduce said that during a fourteen-year period from to , he only worked twenty weeks. Bonaduce and Partridge Family co-star Dave Madden made cameo appearances in a episode of Married That same year, he appeared on an episode of Space Ghost Coast to Coast. He has also guest-starred in the first two episodes of the seventh season of CSI: Bonaduce has appeared as himself on the detective series Monk , and on the show Girlfriends. Bonaduce guest-starred with J. Roth with whom he would later reunite for Breaking Bonaduce on a celebrity episode of Sex Wars. Radio and post-Partridge television[ edit ] In the late s, Bonaduce had become an on-air radio personality. During the TV season, Bonaduce was the host of Danny! Jan Adams who was later replaced by actor Dorian Gregory. During this time, he was also a Hollywood correspondent for the Australian morning show Today. In , he had a recurring role in the crime scene drama CSI as a character known as Izzy Delancy “ a once great, but philandering, rock star, the victim of the infamous miniature killer. He also hosted the short-lived tabloid-themed game show Starface , on Game Show Network. Bonaduce was part of The Adam Carolla Show in In he was given a daily one-hour solo spot known as Broadcasting Bonaduce, which was broadcast locally on the L. In February , it was announced that the station had changed its format from talk to Top 40 , and the removal of Broadcasting Bonaduce from the KLSX schedule was confirmed. Bonaduce received an award from the E! Entertainment comedy show The Soup in , and in a scripted sketch, he refused to read his acceptance speech, and then kissed show host Joel McHale. Danny Bonaduce is an ordained minister; he was ordained online in order to perform a wedding ceremony as part of a 94WYSP radio promotion in early Bonaduce walked on stage and explained that the audience reaction was "because they hate you. Bonaduce, a black belt in Tang Soo Do , adjusted his balance and grip, and threw Fairplay over his head. Fairplay fell to the floor, face first, unable to halt his fall with his hands due to the microphone he was holding. Fairplay stood up after a few moments and staggered before slowly walking off stage, his back to the audience. Bonaduce then smiled and proceeded to make faces and exaggerated shrugging motions at the audience before walking off stage. On October 5, , the L. On January 24, , Bonaduce and Canseco fought to a majority draw. On April 17, , Bonaduce stepped into the ring at the Rosemont Horizon.

I mean, this kid is a known trouble-maker to the point where he's swapped classes, and she's just like "Yep, feel free to undermine me, I'll just wag my finger at you and that's that." In science class, Danny is also there.

New book, new random classmate for Elizabeth to help. But he does get a warning from the principal, Mr. Bowman. Even though Danny loves track and knows Mr. Clark. He acts up in social studies and fights with Ken in science. With his spot on the team up in the air, Danny still manages to set a school record for the meter race. Bowman is not about his work. They want him to quit the track team so he has more time to study. Bowman disagrees, not wanting Danny to drop an activity he loves so much. Danny barely manages to keep his parents from talking to Mr. Clark, since they might find out that he forged their signatures on a letter Mr. She becomes the first person in the book to realize that he might have a learning disability. Danny flips out about having his secret discovered and trashes a room in the library. Elizabeth tries to downplay everything and even take responsibility, but Mr. While cleaning up her room after guilting Elizabeth into helping , Jessica finds a magazine article about an Olympic runner named Greg Voynow. Greg was unable to read until he was 19, thanks to an undiagnosed learning disability. He asked for help and has overcome his problems. The twins think that Danny will be able to connect with Greg, so Elizabeth writes him a letter and asks him to pay a visit. Greg and Danny chat about running before Greg brings up his own struggles with reading. Danny admits that he has trouble and causes distractions so no one will notice. Greg urges him to talk to someone so he can get help. Danny easily agrees, and the next day he talks to Mr. He quickly starts receiving extra help with reading, and is allowed back on the track team. After a few days working with a tutor, Danny asks Mr. He gives a nice speech about how you should ask for help if you have a problem. Danny apologizes to Elizabeth for his tantrum, which is nice, and he thanks her for helping him out. Elizabeth tells Ned that Danny has trouble reading and she thinks his teachers should know. Sooner or later, Danny will make a move on his own. Ned also says that Danny will eventually confide in someone he trusts, and that person will help. Elizabeth told her father that she wants to help someone with a problem, and he told her to do nothing and let someone else deal with it. Greg introduces himself to Danny and then takes him out for ice cream. Celebrities are not immune!

As Danny's schedule gets rearranged and he's suddenly in a bunch of the twins' classes, everyone watches him closely to make sure he doesn't get in trouble. There's a big track meet coming up, and without Danny, SVMS doesn't stand a chance.

Sweet Valley Twins Danny Means Trouble Tagline: Can Elizabeth help Danny without betraying him? I think the stress of being incapable of interfering might be the only true way to kill her. Also, Danny Jackson is not Denny Jacobson. Oh, I thought the book title was actually his name. The only initial thought I had was that of course the girl on the cover is Elizabeth. Look at that outfit. Could you look like more of a bell? I see I should have saved my comment for here. This recap contains vague references to abuse, including child abuse within the text and in real world as well as scientific violence to animals. We open with Elizabeth and Amy at lunch, wondering where Julie Porter is. Clearly I care more than Elizabeth does about her friends. Jessica rocks up with the answer. Julie ran out of the room and probably left school, Jessica concludes. And, bonus, she could watch All the World every day. And Amy makes yet another stupid statement she says a lot of stupid things throughout the years: Very rarely does anyone get punished for anything. And "as Wing pointed out" Ms Langberg could have caused a riot with her last prank. I hope they all get syphilis. That your school does well in athletics. Ah, to not have grown up drowning in USA sportsball obsession. That is clearly what is important. How in the world would he have cut off all her hair with one snip of the scissors, accidental or not?! Ostrich, on the other hand, has dissected many things, including a fetal pig. Some people get to do everything. After a few more yells, the boys start wrestling over it. Way to stand by your man, Amy, because Ken was fighting too. Tom McKay was balancing a cube of lime gelatin on his tongue, and Pete Stone had two straws sticking out of his ears. He was pretending to be deaf. Elizabeth is covering it for the Sixers, and the Boosters are out front twirling and cheering. He tells her that he just broke the school record by 2. He says that he kept getting crushed on the football field, so turned his attention to running. But before she could finish Danny turned and walked off toward Coach Stern. Elizabeth watched him go. Why did Danny get so angry all of a sudden? She turned to walk back toward the bleachers. Jim was on the track team, too. Elizabeth knew Jim pretty well because they were in the same homeroom. Why did Danny get so angry, Elizabeth? Because you pushed your nose in, as usual. You made an assumption about his family based on fuck all, as usual. You were pushy and condescending, as usual. Mary could also go under step-parent issues! Then she walks away wondering why Danny was so mad that she pried into his family life. Why is it not called Sweet Valley Cookies? And yet Some Crumb is kind of an adorable name. I loves me some Judge Judy. She says she has better things to do with her time. When Danny makes a sassy comment, she gives him detention. Not after the openly mocking cartoon, but after the kid asks a few questions about a TV show that might actually be beneficial to the whole class? Agreed on all counts. Jessica acknowledges that the girl is in great shape and decides to start working out, and maybe the boys will pay attention to her. The next day, Mr Bowman is off sick [Raven: Probably took one look at his wardrobe and immediately started vomiting] and a substitute teacher, Mrs Winderhoven, takes over. She hands out a short story for them to read aloud. Danny claims to have seen a mouse, which causes Mrs Winderhoven to swoon in fear, before running out of the room to fetch the custodian. I know at some point Elizabeth has a sundae with a fat girl "either Lois Waller in this series, or Robin Wilson in Sweet Valley High" and internally congratulates herself on being slender because of her healthy diet and exercise, and it just stuck with me since that first bitter read, because aside from the ballet book, Elizabeth does fuck all. Before school, Jessica asks the parents if she can get her ears pierced. Again, I point to book 5 where she stole the earrings that were a gift for her mother. The only thing of interest that happens is that Mrs Wakefield finally makes Steven do a girly chore "clearing the table. When the twins and their parents get to the school, the twins take them to teachers purely at random. Which is not how it went at my school. We all signed up for 10 minute slots. If you missed it, you missed it and that was that. Also, I went to one of the Top 20 schools in the county I grew up in. I find it odd, too, but only because I would never have not done my home work during high school. However, Brother Raptor certainly got in trouble for not doing his homework and the school often though maybe not always told our parents about it. Brother Raptor is so goddamn smart he was bored by homework and the jumping through hoops that standard public education requires here in the USA. And yet he was still penalized for not doing his homework or showing the work he did in the approved way. So maybe enjoy your glass house and stop lobbing bricks, eh? Good god this book is filled with dozens of scenes that go nowhere. Exactly when have the Wakefields ever said no to Jess? Nobody ever says no to Jess. Except when she gets home, Alice says she and Ned have given it a lot of thought and they think the girls will be delighted with the outcome: Yeah, no, Alice, when Jessica said she wanted her ears pierced, she meant now, not when she was in High School. Take them out, the holes heal up. Another spoiler from the podcast: And a couple quick notes about piercings healing: I think for most people, they do easily heal if you leave them out. I know some people whose holes never close. My holes closed, but I have terrible scarring from the two piercings in the lobe minor scarring from the cartilage. In a middle school. God these kids had money "and I say that as someone who grew up in a very wealthy area. When she finds him, he pauses the video and they go into the main room to go through her article. Elizabeth asks about the quotes, are they ok too. As Elizabeth watched Danny, she noticed that he was straining to make out some of the words. It seemed to be taking him a long time to read the short quote. I go to pieces and read the same sentence over and over. Saint Elizabeth then thinks he needs someone to confide in, so asks him if he has trouble reading. Danny will be suspended from the team indefinitely. Elizabeth even makes Jessica write her promise down and sign it. Is that a hint of spine, I see there, Elizabeth? And yet in reality, she should never tell Jessica a secret again after every other time. Also, forget about it, that boy will smack you around if you try to fix him. He suggests that Danny has a learning disability, and this line is so Sweet Valley it needs quoting emphasis mine: Maybe he has some sort of learning disability. Naturally she wheedles and pleads until Elizabeth agrees to do it for her, but for the first time ever, this is actually a plot point, not a flaw. Elizabeth, naturally, thinks that Olympic Greg will come visit Danny in person.
