Do the right thing consistently, over doing lots of things right Posted on May 21, by Alex Mathers It's tough when it feels like we're falling behind.

Doing the Right Things In my last article , I talked about the difference between Tactical thinking and Strategic thinking. Whereas Tactical thinking is management: When it comes to strategic vs. This is especially true when you realize which type of thinker you are. We tend to believe that our type of thinking must be superior. So when I use the term strategic vs. Strategic thinkers tend to analyze the situation but often fail to take action. Think of strategic and tactical thinking like the strings of a violin. In order for the instrument to create beautiful music, each string must have tension applied to both ends. If tension is released from either side, then the music it was intended to create cannot be produced. Doing the Right Things. Today, I run a telemarketing department, so I know something about it. But eight years ago, I was completely ignorant on the topic. Without a script or much of plan, we opened the phone book and started calling. As you can imagine, we were less than successful. One even told me that it was the primary way he gained new business. As most of you know, the primary way a person in that field gets business is through networking: And since that was all she knew, she was using it for her coffee gift basket business. The problem was that, unlike computer programming, where she only needed maybe one or two new clients every few months to make a living, Jackie needed to sell several dozen baskets each week to make a profit. What Jackie needed was a website and a retail outlet to expose her product to the public. Networking meetings were getting her one or two sales, at best, a month. Chapter 3 : Why doing the right thing is always the right thing

Sometimes to do the right thing, you have to break a law. And the key there is in terms of civil disobedience. You have to make sure that what you're risking, what you're bringing onto yourself, does not serve as a detriment to anyone else.

Not being able to govern events, I govern myself. All other "sins" are invented nonsense. Hurting yourself is not a sin – just stupid. Heinlein Goodness is the only investment that never fails. Your character is what you are to yourself, not what you pretend to be to yourself or others. Although human beings often attempt self-delusion, we cannot forever hide the truth about ourselves from ourselves. It will make itself known to us by means of our conscience despite our most strenuous effort to suppress it. He told me to try to be in the first group; there was less competition there. A Mencken Chrestomathy, The reputation of a thousand years may be determined by the conduct of one hour. If you do not grow better, you will most undoubtedly grow worse. Ginder I never did, or countenanced, in public life, a single act inconsistent with the strictest good faith; having never believed there was one code of morality for a public, and another for a private man. Persons with weight of character carry, like planets, their atmospheres along with them in their orbits. Our deeds carry their terrible consequences, quite apart from any fluctuations that went before – consequences that are hardly ever confined to ourselves. And it is best to fix our minds on that certainty, instead of considering what may be the elements of excuse for us. If it does not always tell us what to do, it always cautions us what not to do. Child To speak ill of others is a dishonest way of praising ourselves. Try to be better than yourself. Diversity of character is due to their unequal activity. Faber If it was necessary to tolerate in other people everything that one permits oneself, life would be unbearable. I have within me the great pope, Self. There are simply no answers to some of the great pressing questions. You continue to live them out, making your life a worthy expression of leaning into the light. I shall not judge; for who am I to judge?! For I, myself, am far from perfect, too! I Love You, compiled by H. Jackson Brown The only guy I have to get better than is who I am right now. Glasow What you allow, you encourage. Hodge Aspire to a lower level of harm. They are external dangers, petty dangers. We should fear ourselves. Prejudices are the real robbers; vices the real murders. The great dangers are within us. Why worry about what threatens our heads or purses? Let us think instead of what threatens our souls. You can mistake them for principles and end up dying for them. It was against my principles, but I find that principles have no real force except when one is well fed The ideals which have lighted me on my way and time after time given me new courage to face life cheerfully, have been Truth, Goodness, and Beauty. Each of you, for himself, by himself and on his own responsibility, must speak. And it is a solemn and weighty responsibility, and not lightly to be flung aside at the bullying of pulpit, press, government, or the empty catch-phrases of politicians. You cannot shirk this and be a man. To decide it against your convictions is to be an unqualified and inexcusable traitor, both to yourself and to your country, let men label you as they may. If you alone of all the nation shall decide on way, and that way be the right way accordng to your convictions of the right, you have done your duty by yourself and by your country – hold up your head. Shaw, Man and Superman, Conscience is, in most, an anticipation of the opinion of others. It happens every day. Little boldness is needed to assail the opinions and practices of notoriously wicked men; but to rebuke great and good men for their conduct, and to impeach their discernment, is the highest effort of moral courage. You can be a victor without having victims. Use your good judgment in all situations. There will be no additional rules. Last modified Jul 20 Thu

Chapter 4 : Doing The Right Thing Quotes, Quotations & Sayings

> Doing the right things "consistently" Doing the right things "consistently" That's a core principle of Sam Silverstein's methodology and book: "No More Excuses - The Five Accountabilities for Personal and Organizational Growth." "We are accountable to do the right things consistently."

Everyone else is a million times more talented anyway. The industry seems to be getting more and more competitive. Is there even a need for another voice? These results and these questions make us doubt ourselves. With fewer wins, our motivation slows. This makes it less likely that we will put in energised work to create the momentum we need. We worry, and we panic. My answer is that we make things harder for ourselves by trying to do too much. We are smitten by ever-expanding choice. We are buying jam, sour snakes, yoghurt, and peaches when we only came to buy a carton of milk. Being humans, we tend to be awful at restricting choice in the interest of tackling any one thing. Many of us spread ourselves thin. On top of this, we have more options that are more alluring, distracting and addictive. We end up neglecting the few things that require the biggest piece of our hearts and minds. Do we need more discipline? But this is a myth. We all have discipline. We might have fantastic discipline at watching videos online every day or showing up for breakfast every morning, but poor discipline for making progress in our work. We just need to know where to direct it every day. They direct their attention to the few things that really matter. In doing so, they can gain a considerable advantage over the majority, who are running around like confused, headless geese. My problem was that my focus was scattered. And how do you know what your biggest priorities should be? Your priorities must be the things that bring you to life. Not things you feel you should do; or things that make you look good; or things that your family say you should do. The things that bring you to life. Those things that are valuable to you. Those things that create a spark in you. Those things that make you emotional, even if it takes some time to get warmed up. Successful people focus on doing what they value the most, and they minimise the rest. It means putting back the sour snakes, the peaches, the yoghurt, and the jam when you know that you came for milk. They know that doing more of these kinds of things is what will bring people to them. They keep it going relentlessly. They do the things that can be done every day. Anything that cannot be done daily is "not in my view" not a priority worth pursuing anyway. Day in and day out. Staying focused on the right things is what leads to success. Focus is like holding the magnifying glass in place until there is fire. Consistent focus is more important than talent, intelligence and your connections combined. Most of us are too stuck in the other stuff. We try to do too much. But as long as you go deep into something; be patient; explore; introduce new connections, and allow that thing to evolve, you will not be bored in the long-run. So I knew I needed to make better, more focused decisions consistently. I needed to identify the one single thing I ensured happened every day without fail: Write and publish an article per day. Spend at least one hour writing fiction. Do one thing to progress my online business a step further other than writing articles. I needed to make sure that certain times of the day were blocked off to focus on these high-priority things, with no distractions: I needed a method to ensure these time blocks were spent as effectively as possible, to maximise this high priority work: Use the Pomodoro minute writing limits technique for writing sprints, leading to increased word quantity and better ideas. Turn off the Internet, smartphone, and other distractions and notifications during time blocks. Have an article-writing strategy, using questions I can follow to come up with better ideas that result in more impactful articles. You might also like.

Doing The Right Thing Quotes from BrainyQuote, an extensive collection of quotations by famous authors, celebrities, and newsmakers. "Real integrity is doing the right thing, knowing that nobody's going to know whether you did it or not."

It is times like these that can challenge many companies that do not have this kind of ethical commitment. With pressure on short-term results, many companies set unrealistic goals and employees feel extreme pressure to meet them or face the possibility of losing their jobs. But ethical behavior and integrity are clearly linked to profitability. Ethical Behavior in Sales One of the most visible positions in any organization in terms of ethics is sales. What the salesperson says and does is a direct reflection of the organization and its ethics. Consider this ethical dilemma if you were a real estate agent. You have just landed a fantastic listing: The seller tells you that the home inspector suspects there is insect damage to the siding of the house, but the seller says she has never had any problems. Also, the seller feels so strongly about not disclosing this information to prospective buyers that she said she would rather go with a different agent if you insist on disclosing the possible insect damage. What would you do? Either withholding or falsifying information is lying and therefore unethical. Imagine that you are a financial planner responsible for managing your clients assets. One of your clients is a very conservative investor; right now you are not making much money from his account. You have an opportunity to sell him a high-return investment, but the risk is far greater than you think he would normally take. You think you can sell him on it if you leave out just a few details during your conversation. This could be a win-win situation. Should you give him your pitch with a few factual omissions or just make the investment and tell him after the money starts rolling in? What should you do? Even though the result of the investment could be a good one, it is your obligation to provide full disclosure of the risk and let the customer make the investment decision. You should never make assumptions and decisions on behalf of your customers without their consent. If you are frustrated about your lack of income on the account, you might not be the best financial planner for him. You should have an honest conversation with him and perhaps suggest a colleague or other planner that might be a better fit for his investment strategy. Just Say No What if your employer asked you to do something that you are not comfortable doing? But the deadline is only two days away, and none of your customers is ready to make a purchase. Then you remember talking to one of the administrators, and she mentioned the need for donations. It would help the school during this challenging financial crisis and it would be more inclined to make a purchase quickly. This could be a good move for everyone. When you are in sales, you are not only representing yourself, but you are also representing your company. Although it appears that all parties will benefit from the donation, it is not ethical for the school, you, or your company to make an exchange like that. Donations should be made with no strings attached. You might miss the opportunity to earn your bonus this year, but you will learn valuable lessons to make next year an even better sales year. It was an expensive restaurant, and the two of you thoroughly enjoyed yourselves; you had steak, wine, and a chocolate dessert. After all, you make a lot of money for the company and have been working a lot of nights and weekends lately. Is it OK to submit the additional tip money on this expense report? If you have legitimate expenses, they should be submitted according to the company policy. This can be another one of those slippery slope arguments; if you do it once, you might be tempted to do it again. Many people in many companies have been fired for providing false information on their expense reports. Personal ethics and business ethics are a part of everyday selling. The customer is always right, except when he asks you to do something unethical. What should you do to uphold your ethics and maintain your relationship? Evaluate the situation with a clear head. Most unethical behavior is driven by emotions such as fear, greed, stress, and status. Identify what is causing the behavior but wait until you have some time to reflect. Identify the criteria you are using to make this judgment. Is the behavior against company policy? Is it against the law? Is it against your personal code of ethics? Always ask a trusted colleague, supervisor, or human resources representative for advice. While certain values might be important to you, they may not be important to your best friends or even every member of your family. While family, friends, and your environment have a significant influence, you develop your own set of values. Consider the list below, which includes some examples of values:

HPuschmann Preserve your integrity. You do not wake up one morning a bad person. It happens by a thousand tiny surrenders of self-respect to self-interest. Many of us have to make decisions that define who we are and what we believe in. Most often, the choices we face may seem insignificant. Download M4A You can subscribe to our podcasts using iTunes. However, it feels good to live and work with integrity and, when we become known for this highly valued trait, our lives and our careers can flourish. But what does it really mean to have integrity? The Random House Dictionary defines integrity as: Adherence to moral and ethical principles; soundness of moral character; honesty. The state of being whole, entire or undiminished. A sound, unimpaired or perfect condition. Although the definition is sound, it can be a bit more complex to define integrity in our everyday lives. Alternatively, look at the second and third of these definitions. These were likely meant for structures, such as the integrity of a building. But we can just as easily apply this definition to ourselves. Why Is Integrity Important? There are several reasons why integrity is so important. First, living a life of integrity means that we never have to spend time or energy questioning ourselves. When we listen to our hearts and do the right thing, life becomes simple. Frequently asked questions about the This I Believe project, educational opportunities and more Click here to learn more. Sponsor This Essay There are many things in this world that I believe to be valuable in life but one of the most valuable things that I believe in would be to always do the right thing, even if no one is watching. Very few people actually try to do the right thing when no one is there, and I admit that I do not always follow this but I try my hardest to do the right thing every time. Lets say that while at work I see that someone has left a wallet in their shopping cart. I always will take it to the customer service with out taking anything because I know that I would feel guilty if I did not do the right thing and stole the money out of it. Or lets say that I find that someone has accidentally left an unopened item in their cart. I would never keep that for my self but instead I would go inside and tell the manager that someone had left this item in their cart. This pretty much happens every day at work and I always try to make sure that they can get it back. I believe that when someone decides to not do the right thing just because they know no one is watching is one of the worst things that a person could do. I believe that a persons morals are measured by what they do when they know that no one is watching. Another part of doing the right thing all the time even when no one is looking is that even if I ever do end up doing the wrong thing then the feeling of guilt is always there and I know that if whatever I did this time was wrong then I will try to correct this wrongdoing because I believe that everyone does the wrong thing sometime but that if they truly do feel remorseful for what they have done then the next time that no one is watching then they will do the right thing. And now I leave you with this. Whenever you feel that you can get away with something just because no one is watching, the guilt is not worth it. With this I urge you to always do the right thing, even if no one is watching. Donate If you enjoyed this essay, please consider making a tax-deductible contribution to This I Believe, Inc. Chapter 8 : Do the Right Thing () - Quotes - IMDb

At times it can be hard to know what the right thing even is. Bad personal experiences and stressful work environments make long-term thinking and personal morals a challenge to execute consistently. Or even at all. Life comes at you fast. By choosing to relieve temporary uncomfortableness with a decision to get you out of trouble for the moment. But most of the time, the fast decision is the wrong decision. The easy decision is the wrong decision. The fact that you feel forced into the decision makes the odds of you making the right decision even harder. Your view of the world is screwed up. Your mind and body is screaming at you to do whatever it takes to relieve the pressure and pain that is squeezing down on you at the moment. The truth is that what your life becomes is a direct result of all the stressed-out, painful short-term decisions you make each and every day. Each decision contributes to the results that you will realize one day. You are creating your future. If you make the wrong decisions consistently – even small ones – you will end up with results that are embarrassing and expose you to be the fraud that you really were all along. If you blame others for your mistakes and refuse to take correction or learn from bad decisions that you have made in the past, then the results of your life will only be misery and arrogance. You will become the person you decide to be. Which is why doing the right thing is always the right thing to do. For a few short moments, making the wrong decision feels incredibly right. Do the right thing. It is not always easy to do the right thing.

Chapter 9 : Doing The Right Thing Quotes - BrainyQuote

If you for instance do the right thing 10 percent of the time right now then try to doing it 20 percent of the time. And then 30 percent. Or you can try to do the right thing at as many opportunities as you find this week.

He works at the local pizzeria, but lacks ambition. His older son Pino John Turturro intensely dislikes blacks, and does not get along with Mookie. Because of this, Pino is at odds with both his father, who refuses to leave the increasingly African-American neighborhood, and his younger brother Vito Richard Edson , who is friendly with Mookie. The neighborhood is full of distinct personalities, including Da Mayor Ossie Davis , a friendly drunk; Mother Sister Ruby Dee , who watches the neighborhood from her brownstone ; Radio Raheem Bill Nunn , who blasts Public Enemy on his boombox wherever he goes; and Smiley Roger Guenveur Smith , a mentally disabled man, who meanders around the neighborhood trying to sell hand-colored pictures of Malcolm X and Martin Luther King, Jr. Sal replies that it is his business, and that he can have whomever he wants on "The Wall of Fame". Only Radio Raheem and Smiley support him. During the day, the heat and tensions begin to rise. The local teenagers open a fire hydrant and douse the street, before police officers intervene. Mookie and Pino begin arguing over race. Mookie confronts Pino about his negative attitudes towards African Americans, even though his favorite celebrities are black. Various characters then spew flowery racial insults into the camera: Pino and Sal talk about the neighborhood, with Pino expressing his contempt for African-Americans, and Sal insisting that he is not leaving. Sal almost fires Mookie, but Jade intervenes, before Mookie confronts her for being too close to Sal. Sal, in a fit of frustration and after being called a guinea bastard, calls him a " nigger " and destroys the boombox with a baseball bat. Raheem attacks Sal, leading to a violent fight that spills out into the street, attracting a crowd. While Radio Raheem is choking Sal, the police arrive. Despite the pleas of his fellow officers and the onlookers, one officer refuses to release his chokehold on Raheem, killing him. Realizing that Raheem has been killed in front of onlookers, the officers place his body in the back of a squad car and drive off, leaving Sal, Pino, and Vito unprotected. Firemen and riot patrols arrive to put out the fire and disperse the crowd. After police issue a warning, the firefighters turn their hoses on the rioters, leading to more fighting and arrests. Mookie and Jade sit on the curb, watching in disbelief. The next day, after an argument with Tina, Mookie returns to Sal, who feels that Mookie betrayed him. Mookie demands his weekly pay, leading to an argument. They cautiously reconcile, and Sal finally pays Mookie. Jackson , a local DJ, dedicates a song to Raheem. The film ends with two quotations expressing different views about violence, one from Martin Luther King and one from Malcolm X, before fading to a photograph of them shaking hands. Prior to the credits, Lee dedicates the film to the families of six victims of police brutality:
