Finnish Church aims to be down-to-earth Bishop of Helsinki Irja Askola is ready to talk with everyone in the surrounding community. Bishop of Helsinki Irja Askola second from left smiles after her consecration ceremony. A generation ago, 90 percent of the Finnish population held membership in the Evangelical Lutheran Church, whereas now the number has shrunk to about 75 percent and is falling by about one percentage point annually. Ties between Church and State have also decreased. Nor does the Church wield unquestioned authority anymore. This becomes apparent in the reinforcement and expansion of diaconical work. For instance, the Church represents one of the most important providers of family counselling, and plays a central role in professional crisis work. Jorma Pesonen The Church gets involved in societal issues. We convey the message that every person has inherent value, even if he or she is unproductive or unsuccessful or has done wrong. I encourage everyone to approach foreign cultures and religions with an open heart, healthy curiosity and genuine hospitality. Her election was a sign of change in itself. Female priests were first allowed in the Church of Finland in after a long, drawn-out struggle, and the position of bishop was opened to women five years later. Forty percent of all priests are currently women, and female priests are accepted by all except a small “ though loud and tenacious “ minority. It helps make spiritual questions a part of everyday life. In Finland passed a law allowing same-sex couples to officially register their relationships. The conversation flared up again in the autumn of on primetime television, when a talkshow guest who was against homosexual relationships based her rigid beliefs on the Bible. In the following weeks a fervent public conversation raged and tens of thousands of people renounced their church memberships. The bishop, who is known for her liberal views, believes that despite the loss of members, the conversation made the topic more natural, even commonplace. Church leaders have since decided that priests were allowed to pray with and on behalf of same-sex couples in registered relationships. Askola said that she would like to welcome more same-sex couples for Church blessings, although she would not force any pastor to do so. A bill legalising same-sex marriage passed the Finnish Parliament in late and was signed by the President early in Religion in Finland Freedom of religion is guaranteed under the Finnish Constitution. They have the right to collect taxes from their members and fulfil certain societal functions for them, such as record-keeping and burial arrangements. Children from non-religious families go to a course entitled Ethics. By Salla Korpela, April , updated Tagged in.
