Makeup artists absolutely love the process because it has a remarkable transformative effect. In cosmetic terms it refers to the process of creating shadows. These shadows work to define certain areas, enhance shapes and create a more sculpted look overall. This is essentially the process of adding light to your face. When you add light to certain areas on your face, you make them appear more prominent. A Multi-Stage Process Whether you are contouring and highlighting, using cosmetics or using PinkMirror, the entire process consists of a number of steps. The big difference is that PinkMirror is a lot faster. The next step is to pick the products that suit your features best. For instance, when choosing a bronzer to contour, look for a matte product no more than shades darker than your existing skin tone. There are also contouring powders designed to shape the face. Sculpt Your Cheekbones If your cheekbones are not particularly prominent in photos, it helps to take a picture where you suck in your cheeks. This technique works fantastically well even if you have faint cheekbones. Nose Slimming If you believe your nose looks too big in photos, apply contouring powder down both sides of the bridge of your nose. Do this in a straight line with a shadow brush. You can start from just beneath the eyebrows. Do this by contouring just outside of that area of the face. For example, applying the powder beneath the jaw and along the neckline can reduce the appearance of a double chin or strong jaw. Highlighting Always remember that light colors maximize and dark colors minimize. So be sure to highlight the areas you want to be seen and use dark powder on areas you want to cover up. If you think all of the above is hard work, it is, but only if you are physically using powders and creams. The days of spending hours applying makeup in order to take a pretty picture are gone! You can literally get out of bed, take a picture and a look like a million dollars thanks to the magic of PinkMirror.

For this reason, there are separate controls of the shadows and the highlights. The defaults are set to fix images with backlighting problems. For nondestructive image editing, it is recommended that you use adjustment layers or Camera Raw. See Adjustment and fill layers and Introduction to Camera Raw. Make sure that the Preview option is selected in the dialog box if you want the image to be updated as you make adjustments. Adjust the amount of lighting correction by moving the Amount slider or entering a value in the Shadows or Highlights percentage box. Larger values provide either greater lightening of shadows or greater darkening of highlights. You can adjust both Shadows and Highlights in an image. For finer control, select Show More Options to make the additional adjustments. To restore the original default settings, hold down the Shift key while clicking the Save As Defaults button. For more information on saving and loading settings, see Save adjustment settings. Tonal Width Controls the range of tones in the shadows or highlights that are modified. Smaller values restrict the adjustments to the darker regions for shadow correction and the lighter regions for highlight correction. Larger values increase the range of tones that are adjusted further into the midtones. Tonal width varies from image to image. Too large a value may introduce halos around dark or light edges. The default settings attempt to reduce these artifacts. Halos may also occur when the Shadow or Highlight Amount values are too large. If you find that you are trying to lighten a dark subject but the midtones or lighter regions are changing too much, try reducing Shadow Tone Width toward zero so that only the darkest regions are lightened. Neighboring pixels are used to determine whether a pixel is in the shadows or highlights. Moving the slider to the left specifies a smaller area, and moving it to the right specifies a larger area. The optimum local neighborhood size depends on the image. If the radius is too large, the adjustment tends to brighten or darken the whole image rather than brightening the subject only. Experiment with different Radius settings to obtain the best balance between subject contrast and differential brightening or darkening of the subject compared to the background. Brightness Adjusts the brightness in a grayscale image. This adjustment is available only for grayscale images. Moving the Brightness slider to the left darkens a grayscale image, and moving the slider to the right lightens a grayscale image. Midtone Contrast Adjusts the contrast in the midtones. Move the slider to the left to reduce the contrast and to the right to increase the contrast. You can also enter a value in the Midtone Contrast box. A negative value reduces contrast, and a positive value increases contrast. Increasing midtone contrast produces greater contrast in the midtones while tending to darken the shadows and lighten the highlights. Black Clip And White Clip Specifies how greatly the shadows and highlights are clipped to the new extreme shadow level 0 and highlight level colors in the image. Larger values produce an image with greater contrast. Be careful not to make the clipping values too large, because doing so reduces detail in the shadows or highlights the intensity values are clipped and rendered as pure black or pure white.
