Thu Nov 08, 8: It is fast and scary quiet. I am really impressed. My machine is XP SP2. Backup of data on old drive. Per Apricorn web site I installed the new drive in the T61, and installed the old drive in the device that Apricorn provides with the kit. I used both the USB cables, the second provides additional power to the device. Not sure if it was necessary, but figured it wasn't going to hurt the process. It boots to their simple menu asking if you want to create an image, restore an image, or clone an image. I selected clone an image, it immediately gave an error that said I only had one drive and cloning requires two. I switched the drives, put the old back in the PC and new in the Apricorn device. Called Apricorn they emailed me a new version of the software 6. They also sent me a new CD key. I loaded that on a different PC and it asked if I wanted to create a boot disk, which I answered yes. I took the new boot disk to my T61 and switched the drives back. Booted up and the software came up, and this time it recognized both drives. I used the expert partition creation, so that I could keep the size of the service partition the same as the previous drive. I was going from an 80GB drive to GB drive. The default is to proportionally assign the partitions. This would have created about 1. The one odd thing I did see was that my old drive had Not sure why this was. Anybody have any ideas on why Lenovo would leave a little space at end of drive unallocated? Once I had the partitions setup I continued. The whole clone process took about 20 minutes. It gives an on screen display of progress. When it was done I enable the security chip and booted the machine. Everything appears to work fine. The Thinkvantage button works from within XP and works on startup. This drive is amazing. It is so quiet it truly is scary. My previous Seagate drive was constantly parking the heads with a "clonk" noise. It drove me crazy.

In , Cretu and Sandra married and relocated to the Spanish island of Ibiza. A home recording studio, A. Studios , was built, and Cretu began work on a new, worldbeat and new age musical project named Enigma with David Fairstein and Frank Peterson. He recalled management "fell off their chairs" when he requested it, "but it worked". Cretu was unable to contribute more to the soundtrack as he wished to spend his time working on the album. Cretu retained many of the elements from the first album, but "wanted to have a completely different experience. I wanted to mix as much as possible rock elements and ethnic and classical". Cretu made a conscious effort to reduce the amount of Gregorian chants incorporated into the album. Four singles were released in . The former became an international top hit in 12 countries and is certified gold in the US for selling half a million copies. The Cross of Changes sold an estimated 8 million copies worldwide. In , Cretu was sued by Difang and Igay Duana , the voices of which are used in "Return to Innocence", over the unauthorised usage of their song without credit. It did not achieve the same level of success that they enjoyed previously, and as a result, only two of the three singles originally slated were released. Le Roi est mort, vive le Roi! This time the Gregorian chants were toned down tremendously, although Shakuhachi flutes and other traditional Enigma signatures remain. Only " Gravity of Love " and " Push the Limits " were released as singles from the album. The Remix Collection to end what he considers to be the first chapter of Enigma. A light show was held at the Munich Planetarium in conjunction of the release of the compilation albums. All of the songs are different from the originals and use minimal percussion. It was released in Germany on 10 March . A DVD version of A Posteriori was released on 16 December , which featured kaleidoscope images in synchronization with the multi-channel remastered music. This compilation includes 12 new remixed tracks from the album by artists such as Boca Junior , Tocadisco , and more. Some of these tracks were available previously on the original A Posteriori iTunes version of the album and on the previously mentioned DVD release. The lead single, " Seven Lives ", is a fusion of modern and classical elements. The first CD contains Enigma hits. The second CD contains remixes. The third CD is a collection of "lost tracks", musical experiments which never were finalized and released previously. The public were then asked to vote, with the winning submission "Fei mea" being provided by Latvian singer Fox Lima for the chorus. Mark Joshua from Brazil, J. Spring from Spain and Rasa Serra from Lithuania provided other important parts of the vocals like the bridge, backing and verse of the final version of the single. It became the first song ever created for and by the fans via the internet. It features guest musicians Brazilian singer-songwriter Mark Josher, Indonesian singer Anggun , female voice Nanuk, and English electro-pop duo Aquilo.
