Called brandade in Europe, it is made throughout the continent with salt cod; Steelhead gives it a Northwest twist by using king salmon. Juice and strain into a mixing bowl. Combine zest and vinegar in a small pot and bring to just about a simmer. Add remaining ingredients to the lemon juice in the mixing bowl and add cooled lemon-infused vinegar. Place in shallow container and freeze for 24 hours. Wash the oysters and open with an oyster shucker. With a spoon, scrape 1 tablespoon of granita with a spoon garnish onto each oyster. Top off your Virginicas with a local and cost-effective sparkling wine. Flake smoked salmon and discard the skin. It should yield roughly two cups. Combine heavy cream, milk and potatoes and bring to simmer, cooking until the potatoes are tender. In a heavy bottomed pot, render garlic in olive oil. When garlic is rendered add the bay leaf and onions. Sweat onions until translucent. When potatoes are cooked strain and reserve the liquid. Add potatoes, white pepper and nutmeg to the salmon mixture and mash with a wooden spoon, combining with the other ingredients. Thin the mixture slightly with reserved milk and cream mixture. It will take roughly six ounces. Divide mixture amongst four ramekins and sprinkle with grated Brindisi. Bake in degree oven until bubbly. Garnish with chopped chives. Serve with grilled bread or your favorite crackers.
