Ethnic and international foods have gradually been integrated into the daily diet in North America. However, the existing literature of flavor characteristics and chemistry of such foods remains fragmentary and diverse.

He loves cooking; I love eating. Scientists in the Flavor Industry There are many scientists employed in the flavor industry. They are interesting, passionate people. Some flavor scientists focus on extracting essences, oils and other flavor components from plants, fruits, vegetables, spices, herbs and meat products. Some flavor scientists focus on identifying key aroma components of those extracts. Mother nature is responsible for this. These natural aromas make our food taste good. When our food is processed heat-treated or packaged to make shelf stable, food loses its aroma components. In general, consumers prefer their food with flavor aroma components added. Yes, flavor chemists add chemicals to food, but our food stuffs are naturally composed of chemicals. Flavor Chemist Flavorists or Flavor Chemists focus on compounding flavors for use in applications: We select the natural extracts and aroma components to add to make the item taste good, be affordable, safe, fit product label, and have lasting impact. We have over a thousand substance natural extracts and aroma chemicals to choose from and they are all approved for use in food. Flavor professionals are creative, passionate scientists that have knowledge of the market, have a good palate and have a willingness to try new things. The most satisfying part of being a flavor chemist is having my flavor creations in market products. Variety Some of my more interesting projects I have encountered are flavoring alcohol to taste like wine, flavoring golf tees evidently golfers suck on these? My career path has been full of variety. Food Scientists Food scientists primary focus is producing a safe product and their secondary focus is making it taste good. A food product on the market must be safe and it needs to taste good to sell.
