

Chapter 1 : The Top 10 Most Popular Wedding Flowers

At Festivities, we do both and understand both (and more!). So, we work with you on your vision and the combination of décor and flowers that maximize your event and budget. I don't need bouquets or personal flowers.

Learn more about roses -- the quintessential wedding flower! Representing "consuming love" and "happy years," the tulip can be a meaningful wedding choice. The flowers are grown in a wide range of colors, including white and cream; pastels like pink, yellow, and peach; and vibrant hues like magenta, red, and purple. Available during much of the year, the most common tulips are very affordable, though rare varieties can be expensive. The versatile tulip can enhance both elegant wedding settings and more casual venues, and work well in almost any permutation -- from bouquets to boutonnieres to table arrangements. Three main varieties are commonly used: Dutch tulips typically seen at neighborhood florist shops and in gardens, French tulips expensive and elegant, with extra-long stems and large tapered blooms, and parrot tulips noted for their ruffled, striped petals in intense colors.

Calla Lily Shipra Panosian Also known as the arum lily, this elegant, trumpet-shaped blossom originated in Africa and symbolizes "magnificent beauty" in the language of flowers. Two types are commonly available: Creamy ivory is the most popular color, but calla lilies also come in yellow, orange, mauve-pink, and dark purple.

Lily of the Valley Tanja Lippert Photography With bell-shaped florets dangling from a thin stem, the lily of the valley is sometimes called "the ladder to heaven. In Norse mythology, the flower is linked to Ostara, the goddess of springtime, and while most plentiful during this season, it remains available and very expensive most of the year. So while a fistful of lily of the valley might be your dream, a more affordable alternative may be to use just a few stems to infuse a bouquet or centerpiece with its wonderful fragrance. Most people know of the white variety, but lily of the valley also comes in a very rare rosy-pink. One of the most popular varieties changes in color as it grows from bubble-gum pink to sky blue, depending on the acid level of the soil. A stem or two of this moderately priced, scentless shrub flower helps fill out arrangements and bouquets, and a few sprigs make a charming boutonniere.

Peony Kate Headley The peony has a large, full head, strong perfume, and bright color. But despite this outward showiness, the flower acquired the Victorian meaning "bashfulness. A bouquet made solely of peonies can be gorgeous; the flower can also be used to create beautiful centerpieces and arrangements. Grown in single- and double-flower styles, this expensive bloom is seasonally available from late spring to early summer but can be imported in the fall.

Ranunculus Mi Belle Photography Looking for a cost-effective alternative to roses or peonies? Try the lush, multi-petaled ranunculus, a relative of the buttercup. First seen by Westerners in the Far East around the thirteenth century, this mild-scented flower features several blossoms on a stem with fernlike foliage. To carry ranunculus is to tell your partner, in the Victorian language of flowers, "I am dazzled by your charms.

Stephanotis Callaway Gable The Victorian meaning for this flower is "marital happiness," making the dainty white Stephanotis an obvious choice for weddings. The star-shape, waxy florets actually grow on a flowering vine; each must be individually wired or placed onto a special holder before it can be arranged. A bouquet of stephanotis blossoms is one of the most traditional a bride can carry, and a stephanotis boutonniere is a classic choice for a formal wedding.

Sweet Peas Melissa Robotti The sweet pea, which signifies "lasting pleasure," was first brought to England from Sicily in 1596, and the English have had a love affair with this delicate flower ever since. Its candy-like scent and ruffled blossoms make this an old-fashioned favorite in bouquets for the bride and her bridesmaids.

Gardenia Q Weddings Surrounded by dark green, waxy leaves, the exquisite gardenia exudes a sultry, heavy scent. It was this intoxicating fragrance that captivated an English sea captain traveling through South Africa in 1795, prompting him to bring home one of the native plants as a souvenir. Gardenias are lovely tucked into a bouquet or floating in a low bowl as a centerpiece, and a single gardenia makes a wonderful scented corsage or hair accessory. Large three- to four-inch blossoms, as well as a miniature variety, are available. Not sure where to begin with your wedding planning? Chapter 2 : How To Donate Your Wedding Flowers - Here Comes The Guide

A top wedding trend is choosing sentimental flowers, such as using the same flowers that your parents had at their wedding, or the types of flowers that played a significant part in your love story - like the first flowers your fianc  ever bought you: purple tulips, for instance. Or your birthmonth flower, or a flower native to your culture.

How much does a wedding florist cost? Aug 3, Wedding florists provide flower arrangements for the ceremony, bridal party and reception. Floral requests often include bouquets, boutonnieres, corsages, aisle decorations, gazebo decorations, altar arrangements, cocktail-hour decor, sweetheart table arrangements, sign-in table decor, buffet arrangements and cake table decor. Many factors affect the cost of wedding flowers.

Location Geographic location affects the cost of wedding florist services. Wedding florists typically have higher rates in large cities such as Los Angeles or New York than in smaller towns and areas with lower costs of living.

Variety The more variety requested in the floral arrangements, the higher the overall cost. If a florist does not own a flower shop or have direct access to a flower market, it costs less for the florist to buy just one or two types of flowers in bulk than to buy a small number each of a diverse range of flowers.

Type of flowers Exotic flowers, high-demand flowers and flowers with a short blooming season cost much more even at wholesale markets than flowers that are easier to access. To save money, couples should consider flowers that are in season or growing locally. For example, according to Garden Gate Vintage Flowers and Events in Salt Lake City, Utah, peonies are incredibly popular but have a very short growing season and a high price. David Austin roses are another popular but pricey wedding choice. High wholesale prices to the florist translate to higher wedding flower costs to the couple.

A single peony flower: A small carnation stem: It is typically most cost effective to have the same florist do the decor. The price of bridal party flowers is affected by the type of flower, the number of arrangements and the diversity of flowers used in each arrangement.

Floral decor Weddings often feature floral decor for the ceremony and the reception. Decor can include both flowers and decorative greens. Costs will always be higher when desired flowers are out of season or are pricier than others, such as peonies. Here are examples of average costs for simple arrangements from Garden Gate Vintage Flowers and Events: Choosing flowers in season can help reduce costs. For example, roses and tulips are available year round, while flowers such as peonies have a short season in late spring and early summer and will cost much more off-season.

Cost-saving strategies Ask your wedding florist for less expensive floral alternatives. Reuse ceremony flowers, such as those from the altar or aisle, at the reception. Keep flower variety to a minimum. How do we know these prices? Millions of people ask Thumbtack for help with their projects every year. We track the estimates they get from local professionals, then we share those prices with you.

A top wedding trend we've noticed is that the cold months don't limit the types of flowers and greenery used in wedding décor. In fact, we're seeing a beautiful array of winter-season flowers, and creative use of lighting and color to make a winter wedding gorgeous in a wedding ballroom.

Next Bouvardia This flower is perfect for fleshing out a classic wedding bouquet or arrangement. It has clusters of small, star-shaped blossoms bursting from a leafy green stem and is very delicate. If you like bouvardia, supplement with some stephanotis blooms as well. They share a similar structure, but vary just enough to catch your eye. Calla Lily Also known as the arum lily, this trumpet-shaped blossom originated in Africa and symbolized "magnificent beauty" to the Victorians. Two types are commonly available: Calla lilies have a sturdy, strong stem. Consider using them to add height and additional structure to tall centerpieces. See more calla lily photos from real weddings. Camellia A symbol of loveliness and beauty, this multipetaled relative of the tea plant was originally from China. In the story a courtesan named Violetta always wore a white camellia, except for the few days of the month when she was "not available" and donned a red camellia instead. The ruffled-heads look offers an inexpensive way to bring lushness and color to bouquets and arrangements. When massed, they also make a pretty bouquet of their own. Carnations have a long history; they were reportedly used to make ceremonial crowns in ancient Greece, and they were on hand at the wedding of Maximilian of Austria, the emperor of Mexico in 1867, symbolizing marital bliss. Today, more than 30 species in large, single blooms and miniature spray varieties are available. Flower walls and stand-out arrangements call for hardy and long-lasting blooms, which are two things carnations are known for. Chrysanthemum About a thousand varieties of long-lasting, versatile mums can be found in single blossoms or sprays. The mum has been cultivated in the Far East for more than 2,000 years, even making appearances in the writings of Confucius. What it lacks in sweet perfume, it makes up for in a range of bold colors. When arranged en masse, small flowers have a striking effect. Decorate your aisle with pomanders of button chrysanthemums to give your guests some eye candy as they shuffle into their ceremony seats. Coxcomb Named the coxcomb due to its resemblance to a rooster, this vibrant flower is sure to make a statement. Paired with dahlias and garden roses, these three flowers with their unique architectural components create eye-catching centerpieces. Its button head and colorful legend make it a charming boutonniere flower for groomsmen.
