It also has some of the oldest post-colonial settlements in the US, and along with them some of the oldest graveyards. Half a millennium has been plenty of time for those cemeteries to gather creepy reputations. Ghost hunters note a lot of activity around the grave of Ruth Blay, a schoolteacher that fell pregnant outside of marriage in . She was scared to tell anyone, and eventually delivered the baby stillborn. The child told her parents about it, and Ruth was arrested and sentenced to death for murder. However, this particular cake of systemic injustice comes frosted with an epic level of being the worst person possible, in the form of Sheriff Thomas Packer. On the day Ruth was due to be hanged, word spread that a reprieve was being sought from the governor. Packer, however, wanted to have his lunch at noon and so brought the execution forward by an hour. Within minutes, a horse messenger arrived carrying a pardon from the governor. Packer had already left, and Ruth Blay was already dead. Later that day, the townspeople burnt an effigy of Packer outside of his house. Paranormalists claim that cameras stop working around the area where Ruth Blay was buried, and that two nearby graves glow. Some people suggest that both she and her baby haunt the place. Researchers also claim to have experienced activity around the graves of two young women who were murdered by a German named Luis Wagner. He strangled the women and attacked them with an axe until the handle broke. He was hanged in Maine in . The women became known as the Smuttynose murder victims. The ghosts of those executed have every right to be angry. Among them is Giles Corey, an year-old man that was crushed to death for refusing to plead his guilt or innocence. He is buried in Howard Street Cemetery in Salem, and locals claim his ghost can be seen wandering around the place. Witnesses saw the ghostly form of an old man floating through the cemetery in . The blaze destroyed 1, buildings and left 18, people homeless. It is said that Corey always appears shortly before something bad happens. Before it closed in , it was the oldest operating jail in the country. People also saw figures moving around, and heard voices and screams. Some of these figures wore civil war uniforms, and could apparently pass through walls. Those ghosts may have moved out when the place was renovated, but some of the apartments offer a view directly over the graveyard. You can rent one for a couple of thousand a month and keep an eye out for Giles. If you see him, maybe skip town for a few days? He performed the procedures in his house opposite the entrance to Goodleburg Cemetery around the turn of the 20th century, and they rarely ended well. When women died during the operations, Dr Speaker dumped their bodies in a presumably very deep cemetery pond. People claim that bones still wash up there. He died before he could be tried, hanging himself from a tree in the graveyard. The murder victim, Helen Lindeman, is said to stalk the place in black. The ghosts of women that died during abortions have also been reported. The oddest and most disturbing stories are of people seeing phantom fetuses crawling around the cemetery ground, amid cries of children and weeping women. All of these tales have brought on a huge number of ghost hunters. On top of the usual screaming at the air and running around, the hunters have been reported to engage in turf wars. The investigators have committed significant vandalism. Police have been forced to patrol the graveyard on Halloween and ban parking in all nearby roads. For the people of Wales, it seems, the living are the real nuisance. Blood, you have little choice but to pursue a career in the dark arts, or possibly murder. According to legend, Abel Blood of New Hampshire did both. He was buried in Pine Hill Cemetery, Hollis, in . During his lifetime he was said to practice black magic , and to have massacred his family. The graveyard is often called Blood Cemetery because of that particular resident. During the day he is said to be in hell. During the night, he rises and stalks the cemetery. A finger on his tombstone allegedly points upward during the day but downward at night. The cemetery is closed during the night, and at Halloween it is heavily patrolled by authorities. Both men received full military honors. Their ghosts are said to rise from their graves each night and yell at each another. The cemetery is from the 17th century, but its most famous spiritual resident came along a couple of hundred years later. Ephraim, as he is known, is an old fellow that dresses in 19th century clothing. Ephraim sneers at everyone, and he has a particular distaste for women. He yells vulgarities, makes obscene gestures, and pounds on car windows. Not even other ghosts are safe. One witness said she heard him yelling the name Catherine. She was scared, so she fled, but when she turned back she saw Ephraim kneeling over the ghost of a woman. Ephraim was beating her, and then they vanished. She drifts between Union Cemetery and another one, slightly down the road, called Stepney Cemetery. Some people say she died in childbirth and is searching for her child. Others believe she was murdered at some point near the start of the 19th century. She wears a white dress, and she tends to appear in the road beside the cemetery. Cars have apparently swerved to avoid hitting her. One fireman claims he did hit her, and she left a dent on his truck. When he got out she was gone. One of the main proponents of the White Lady story is Lorraine Warren. She and her late husband Ed gained fame researching the Amityville Haunting, which went on to inspire numerous books and movies. They claim to have captured the White Lady on video, forming from mist. Feel free to draw your own conclusions from that. He was a Bulgarian immigrant who owned two restaurants in the New York town of Massena. He was shot and killed in when a hunter mistook him for a deer. Dragon was buried in the local Pine Grove cemetery, and his grave has become the focal point for local ghost hunters. Other reports include the usual electronic interference, including of the scanners in police cars passing by. Local paranormal organization the Shadow Chasers claim the creatures feed on the energy of the local street lamps. The place is also said to be home to dozens of victims of an infamous massacre, the Raid of York in But most of the stories about the place involve the grave of Mary Nasson, often called the White Witch of York. During her life she was a herbalist, but also an exorcist. When she died at 29, her husband Samuel buried her and placed granite slab above her grave. Rumors say it keeps her from getting out, but a cemetery placard insists it simply keep away pigs and cattle. The residents of the town have reported seeing her wandering around. The word referred to victims of consumptionâ€”the old name for tuberculosisâ€”who then had their bodies exhumed. People would burn the hearts and liver of the dead and inhale the fumes, believing this would offer some protection from the disease. Nellie died of pneumonia, not tuberculosis, so she was never exhumed. One local, Marlene Chatfield, claims to have had several experiences with the ghost. In another incident, Chatfield claims she met a young woman from an historical society at the cemetery. The photos of the grave she took on that occasion came out reversed, while the rest of the film roll was fine. Chatfield never saw the possessed young woman again. The grave is now unmarked and impossible to find, unless you already know where it is. Or you walk across it by accident and Nellie tries to rip your face off. When Alan was a teenager, a girl he had a crush on insisted on holding on to him while walking through a cemetery because she found the place creepy. You can pester him on Twitter.

many people will testify that "dead and buried" certainly does not mean "gone forever" in these stories, the dearly departed simply refuse to take death lying down.

Click Here for More Information about the book! We all wonder, no matter what we believe in, what will happen to us after we pass on from this world. Some believe that everything comes to an end, that life in this world is our only existence. Others feel that we are born again, as an old soul in a new body, while others believe that our spirits pass on to another place. We all wonder about such things. Death has been celebrated and feared since the beginning of time itself. We have immortalized it with cemeteries, grave markers and of course, with our darkest and most frightening legends and lore. It is a common belief among experts of the occult that cemeteries are not usually the best places to find ghosts. While most would fancy a misty, abandoned graveyard to be the perfect setting for a ghost story, such stories are not as common as you might believe. A cemetery is meant to be the final stop in our journey from this world to the next, but is it always that way? Nearly every ghost enthusiast would agree that a place becomes haunted after a traumatic event or unexpected death occurs at that location. History is filled with stories of houses that have become haunted after a murder has taken place there, or after some horrible event occurs that echoes over the decades as a haunting. But what of a haunted cemetery? Do such places really exist? Most assuredly they do, but ghosts who haunt cemeteries seem to be a different sort than those you might find lingering in a haunted house. Most of these ghosts seem to be connected to the cemetery in some way that excludes events that occurred during their lifetime. As most spirits reportedly remain in this world because of some sort of unfinished business in life, this seems to leave out a cemetery as a place where such business might remain undone. Graveyard ghosts seem to have a few things in common. These spirits seem to be connected to the burial ground because of events that occurred after their deaths, rather than before. In other cases, the ghosts seem to be seeking eternal rest that eludes them at the spot where their physical bodies are currently found. Cemeteries gain a reputation for being haunted for reasons that include the desecration of the dead and grave robbery, unmarked or forgotten burials, natural disasters that disturb resting places, or sometimes even because the deceased was not properly buried at all! No region of America seems to be spared when it comes to haunted graveyards. Those interested in more stories, should check out the book or look into other parts of the website. This now restored cemetery has seen much in the way of desecration over the years and because of the lost burials and unmarked graves, many believe that a number of ghosts roam the area around it. This small and secluded graveyard is believed to be one of the most haunted places in the Chicago area. More than documented reports of strange phenomena have been collected here, including ghost lights, apparitions, odd photos, unexplained happenings and more. The Lost Village of Bara-Hack: This vanished town in Connecticut is still rumored to be haunted by mysterious voices. Tales from the local graveyard also whisper of apparitions and ghostly images from the past. Western Burial Ground - Baltimore: The catacombs of this cemetery where Edgar Allan Poe is buried are located beneath Westminster Hall and have long been the subject of ghostly tales.. Christ Church Cemetery - St. Legend has it that this cemetery is haunted by a ghostly light. The stories say that the grave of a woman who was terrified of the dark sometimes emits a spectral light. Its real-life counterpart had been placed there by her husband before his own death. The light continued to be seen long after. This spooky graveyard has long been haunted by a vanishing woman in white who flags down taxi drivers and asks to be taken home. She vanishes from the car before they arrive and the driver always discovers that the woman died years before. To this day, taxi drivers will not pick up women in white dresses near the cemetery! The graveyard is also said to be haunted by the ghost of voodoo queen, Marie Laveau. Her spirit has been reported inside of the cemetery and even on nearby streets. Believers still come to her tomb today and leave offerings in hope of being blessed by her supernatural powers. Hollywood Memorial Park- Los Angeles: This "cemetery to the stars" is reportedly haunted by starlet Virginia Rappe, who allegedly died after a night of debauchery with comedian Fatty Arbuckle. Another resident ghost is reportedly Rudolph Valentino, who joins a legion of other spirits near the gates to the adjoining Paramount Studios complex. Silver Cliff Cemetery - Colorado: The lights have been studied and examined many times by scientists and by National Geographic magazine but remain unexplained. Stepp Cemetery - Indiana: This remote cemetery in the Morgan-Monroe State Forest has long been considered haunted. Although many legends exist to explain the ghost, most agree that the graveyard is haunted by a woman in black who has been seen here for years. Fresh flowers often mysteriously appear on the grave of a Confederate soldier who is buried here. It is believed that they are left behind by the famous "Lady in Gray", a widow who lost her husband at the terrible prisoner of war camp that was here during the Civil War. Her ghost has been seen walking among the tombstones. Greenwood Cemetery - Decatur, Illinois: Long believed to be one of the most haunted spots in downstate Illinois if not the Midwest, Greenwood Cemetery is filled with legends and stories of ghosts and haunted places. Among them are the ghost of a young girl who has been seen walking among the grave in a bridal gown, a weeping woman in white, ghost lights that are said to be the spirits of flood victims and even Confederate soldiers who were buried here in unmarked graves after being taken from a prison train. Resurrection Cemetery - Chicago, Illinois: The ghost of the girl who has come to be known as "Resurrection Mary" is one of the most famous ghosts of Chicagoland. She is believed to have been killed along Archer Avenue near the cemetery after leaving a dance one night. She was buried in Resurrection Cemetery and has spent the last 80 years traveling the roadways and asking drivers to drop her off at the cemetery gates. When she arrives there, she always vanishes. And there are literally dozens more America is filled with stories of haunted cemeteries. This section of the website barely scratches the surface! An Excerpt from Beyond the Grave: They are places that go beyond the legends of merely being haunted and enter into the realm of the diabolical. They are places said to be so terrifying that the Devil himself holds court with his worshippers there But just how terrifying are these places? There is not much left of the tiny village, save for a few houses, the newer church and about twenty residents. However, the population of the place allegedly contains a number of residents that are from beyond this earth! For years, stories of witchcraft, ghosts and supernatural happenings have surrounded the old graveyard. It is a place that some claim is one of the "seven gateways to hell. In November, an article appeared in the University of Kansas student newspaper that spoke of a number of strange occurrences in the Stull churchyard. It said that the cemetery had been the source of many legends in the area, stories that had been told and re-told for over a century. One student claimed to have been grabbed by the arm by something unseen, while others spoke of unexplained memory loss when visiting the place. Like many other locations of this type, the tales of devil worship and witchcraft also figured strongly into the article. But were the stories actually true? Not according to the residents of Stull, who claimed to have never even heard the stories before. They were bemused, annoyed and downright angered that such things were being said about their town. The pastor of the new church in Stull, located right across the road from the old one, indicated that he believed the stories to be the invention of students at the university. But such stories have a strong hold on people, as evidenced by the reaction to the article that claimed that the devil would appear in Stull Cemetery on the night of the Spring Equinox and again on Halloween. On March 20, more than people waited in the cemetery for the arrival of the devil. The word also spread that the spirits of those who died violent deaths, and were buried there, would return from the grave. Unfortunately, the only spirits that showed up that night came in bottles and cans The problem seems to be that the cemetery has a lack of real, documented accounts of strange activity. One story told of two young men who were visiting Stull Cemetery one night and became frightened when a strong wind began blowing out of nowhere. They ran back to their car, only to find that the vehicle had been moved to the other side of the highway and was now facing in the opposite direction. Another man claimed to experience this same anomalous wind, but inside of the church rather than in the graveyard. He claimed that the sinister air current knocked him to the floor and would not allow him to move for some time. It was said that the witchcraft-practicing early settlers were so repentant about their past deeds that they changed the name of the town. The post office closed down in, but the name stuck. In, an article appeared in the Kansas City Times that added further fuel to the rumors about Stull Cemetery and the abandoned church. The article was quoted as saying that the Devil chose two places to appear on Earth every Halloween. But why in Stull? Years later, the barn was converted into a church, which in turn was gutted by fire. A decaying wooden crucifix that still hangs from one wall is thought to sometimes turn upside-down when passersby step into the building at midnight Author Lisa Hefner Heitz has collected numerous legends that have added to the mythology of Stull Cemetery. He comes to visit a witch that is buried there. It should also be mentioned that there are rumors that an old tree in the graveyard, which was cut down a year or so ago, was once used as a gallows for condemned witches.

Montague Rhodes James () was one of England's finest writers of short ghost stories, and it is a delight to see one of England's finest genre actors Christopher Lee, portraying the author in two episodes from 'Christopher Lee's Ghost Stories for Christmas' as part of Aunty Beeb's spectral line-up.

Ghosts, unexplained phenomena, and even vampires figure in these stories of graveyards from all over. It was a silver mine. Despite an abundance of ore, bad management and financial shenanigans ran the company into the ground -three times! The cemetery is famous today for its dancing blue lights. National Geographic published an article about the lights in *Witnesses say the lights are small, round, and come in other colors besides blue at times. The lights dance across the gravestones. Some say they are reflections of lights from town, but sightings were recorded before electricity came to Silver Cliff. Only a couple of dozen graves are there, some going back years. It is officially a local family cemetery, but legend has it that it was founded by a cult called the Crabbites, whose rituals include snake handling and sex orgies. Some reports say you can still hear the chanting of their gatherings in the cemetery at night. However, I could not find any references to the Crabbites outside of Stepp Cemetery stories, which gives it urban legend status. Yet another story attributes the crying sounds heard to an old woman who put a curse on the cemetery after a fraternity group killed her dog and left its body at the cemetery. A smallpox epidemic struck the camp in , and the victims, both prisoners and those who worked at the camp, were buried there. After the war, the camp was dismantled and the cemetery is the only remnant left. Gravestones began to replace wooden markers in . After the war was over, she married a Union veteran but never forgot her Southern sympathies. She visited the Camp Chase Cemetery and placed flowers on various graves, even those covered with overgrowth. Briggs wore a veil to hide her identity during her evening visits, earning her the nickname "the Veiled Lady of Camp Chase. After her death in , reports of mysterious flowers appearing on graves and the sounds of crying were attributed to the ghost of Mrs. Briggs, who then came to be known as "The Gray Lady. Highgate Cemetery Highgate Cemetery in London, England, has its share of celebrities, but after it was filled, maintenance declined and the resulting overgrowth made it a classically spooky-looking place. In the s, interest in the occult led to rumors and sightings of first ghosts, then vampires, in Highgate Cemetery. Both vowed to be the one who could rid the cemetery of the vampire. A series of escapades in the cemetery occurred between and in which crowds of people gathered after dark, and corpses were found unearthed, damaged, and sometimes posed. Police tried to keep order, and in Farrant was jailed for vandalizing graves. Manchester and Farrant carry on their occult rivalry to this day. A lasting document from the vampire scare 40 years ago is the Hammer film Dracula AD , which was inspired by the Highgate Cemetery hijinks. Image by Flickr user Anders B. Remains were interred and sealed with marble and cement. In , the mausoleum was opened for the fourth burial, but the three earlier coffins were found to have moved! They were repositioned and resealed. Twice in and once in , the crypt was opened for further burials and the previous coffins were found flipped over or turned end-to-end. The island governor ordered a seal placed on the door and sand was put on the floor to retain evidence of any break-ins. Yet when the crypt was next opened, the seal was unbroken, the sand was intact, and the coffins were again moved. The vault has not been used since. Although contemporary accounts say there was no evidence of flooding , the simplest explanation is underground water seepage , which could move coffins without seeming to disturb a layer of sand. As the vault is built of coral, leakage does seem to make sense. She was preceded in death by her mother and sister, victims of tuberculosis, and Mercy would often visit their graves. In January , year-old Mercy herself fell to tuberculosis and was interred with her family members. His son Edwin fell sick, also with tuberculosis, but as he experienced visits from Mercy, the family and townspeople considered the cause of his illness to be the restless dead. George Brown, with the help of others, dug up the graves of his wife and two daughters on March 17, . Only Mercy, who died in January, was free of decomposition. This led George to believe she was a vampire. He nevertheless died a couple of months later.*

Chapter 4 : 28 Of The Creepiest, Most Messed Up Graveyard Shift Stories Youâ€™ll Ever Read | Thought

The SEQUEL to Best Seller 'Ghost Stories And The Unexplained' is HERE! A collection of chilling 'Hitchcock'-style Ghost Stories that lines up Five Sets of victims who endure the psychological torture of entities From Beyond The Grave.

They say her ghost returned from the grave to name her killer. She was married to a man named Edward who worked as a blacksmith. One day, after they had been married only 3 months, Edward sent a young African-American boy named Andy Jones to his house on an errand. He was supposed to ask Zona if there was anything she needed from the store. Her eyes were wide open and staring right at him. The boy ran home to tell his mother and she raised the alarm. When the coroner arrived an hour later, he found the dead woman wearing a stiff-collared dress that covered her neck and she had a veil over her face. When the coroner tried to take a closer look, Edward reacted so violently that the coroner gave up and left. The strangest thing about it was that Zona had not even been pregnant. When she washed it in a basin, the water turned as red as blood. The old woman believed this was a sign that Zona had been murdered. One night, the ghost of Zona appeared to her mother and told her exactly how she had died. She said Edward was cruel and abusive to her. One day, he went too far. She told him she had no meat for his dinner and Edward flew into a rage. He attacked his wife and broke her neck. When she said this, the ghost slowly turned her head completely around at the neck. When he heard the news, Edward began to get nervous and stressed-out. On her throat, were the marks of fingers. Edward Shue was arrested and charged with murder. When the police investigated his background, they found some suspicious facts. Edward had a violent temper. He had beaten his first wife severely and thrown her out of the house. His second wife had died mysteriously of a blow to the head. He told everyone who would listen that there was no evidence against him. Nobody knows if the jury took her story seriously, but they did come back with a guilty verdict and Edward was sentenced to life in prison. He died a few years later in Moundville Penitentiary. Today, there is a sign on the highway near Greenbrier. Her death in was presumed natural until her spirit appeared to her mother to describe how she was killed by her husband Edward. Edward, found guilty of murder, was sentenced to the state prison. Only known case in which testimony from ghost helped convict a murderer.

Ghosts, apparitions and phantasms roam through our houses and our favorite places, not ready to move onto the next realm. Some of these spirits are friendly enough, but others seem menacing in nature. No matter their disposition, real ghost stories are creepy, and these five encounters are some of the creepiest of all. Often, she would find her daughter babbling and laughing at an empty air, as if something or someone unseen was interacting with her. Occasionally, the toddler would begin to cry, and before her mother could get to her, she would suddenly calm down and appear comforted. It was growing late, and the woman had put her daughter to bed hours beforehand. She was seated at her desk in her office trying to get some work done when she suddenly felt compelled to look up. She saw the reflection of an old woman in her window. The old woman had a wrinkled face, and wore an ancient dressing gown. Confused and shocked, the mother blinked and the old woman disappeared. Not long after this incident, the mother woke up in the middle of the night to the sound of her daughter crying from her bedroom. As she and her husband started to scramble out of bed to check on her, they began to hear something odd come through on the baby monitor. They contacted a priest and had the house cleansed the very next day. But she never expected to encounter one herself. It all began when she decided to move to North Carolina and live with her boyfriend in his rented ranch house. One night, she found herself suddenly wide awake. The place was dark, but a faint glow from the moon illuminated the open door frame of their bedroom, and the long narrow hallway that led to the bathroom. As she sat up and put her glasses on, she was terrified to see a very tall figure standing in the doorway. Before Chelsea could scream or wake her boyfriend up, the figure slowly turned and made his way down the hall towards the bathroom. The following morning, Chelsea and her boyfriend, Matt, were eating breakfast when she decided to tell him about what she had seen. By the soothing light of day, she had told herself that it had only been a shadow, or perhaps a very lucid dream. However, after she described the physical characteristics of the apparition, and how he had turned and walked down the hallway, she found that Matt had stopped eating and had a solemn expression on his face. I see that figure all the time, standing in the doorway of our bedroom. They suspected that the house contained a residual haunting. When she became old enough to drive, she and her buddies would often go up there and hang out in a pavilion across the street, curious about the cemetery but far too frightened to venture through it. As the years progressed, Jennifer kept hearing that many bad things had happened in the cemetery, but she never heard any of the grisly details. After she became an adult, she decided it was finally time to investigate. Jennifer contacted a local paranormal investigation team and suggested that they check out Goshen Cemetery. She was both excited and nervous when they told her she could accompany them on their investigation. Their trip began a few minutes after the sun went down. They slowly made their way through the cemetery, combing through the space together. Nothing happened for the first few hours, except for the random chirping and squeaks of animals that called the cemetery home. It was roughly around midnight when things grew infinitely more sinister. Jennifer and the team began to notice a soft glowing light coming from the furthest corner of the cemetery. She was frightened by this sudden activity, but worked up the courage to remain with the group to check out what it was. But the closer they got, the light somehow seemed farther and farther away. By the time they had made it to the far edge of the cemetery, the light had disappeared altogether. Everyone was surprised to find that only a single headstone resided in that section of the park. The grave was unmarked and seemed quite old. As Jennifer stared down at it, an intense chill began to run through her body. The team members sensed her sudden discomfort and began to ask questions to any spirits who were in the area. After a few minutes, the chilly sensation eased up, and Jennifer felt a little less panicked. The following day, one of the members of the team contacted Jennifer to show her the evidence they had gathered. They sent her two Electronic Voice Phenomena – also known as EVPs – some photographs and one video, all of which had been recorded or taken right after Jennifer began to experience the sudden chill. The pictures showed multiple misty apparitions standing on either side of Jennifer. The video showed the mists form and slowly begin to circle around her right as she could be seen visibly shivering on the video. According to town records, the man was rather popular with the ladies and many townsfolk suspected that he had been murdered as a result. Talk about real life ghost stories! One evening he was home alone, lounging on his couch watching television when a slight movement out of the corner of his eye caught his attention. Jim glanced into the open doorway of his bedroom, through which he could see the open entrance to his closet. The ghostly figure had started walking towards the opposite side of the bedroom, but suddenly stopped and turned to look at Jim head on. Slowly, the apparition raised a finger to his lips and then turned around. The spirit walked back into the closet and promptly disappeared. Jim found this encounter to be quite terrifying but was even more creeped out when he told his landlord about the incident, and the landlord admitted that the tenant who had lived in the house, before Jim and his wife, had committed suicide in the bedroom. Jim found the small bullet hole in the ceiling immediately after. He and his wife then decided to find a new place to live. Ecstatic and eager to show her husband, Stacey grabbed her phone and started recording it. In order to make her son laugh some more, she set him on her knee and began to repeatedly bounce him up and down. Afterward, Stacey set her son down and played the recording back. On it, she could hear her son laughing, and her own voice counting. Stacey and her son were home alone at the time, and none of the televisions or radios in the house had been on.

Proof Of Life After Death? The stories that I am about to share with you today are considered by many to be some of the best proof that we do live on. Sometimes, when a loved one dies they reach out to us to let us know that they are ok, and this usually happens if that person died very unexpectedly. But when a person is murdered and the killer roams free the dead will do whatever they can to let their loved ones know exactly what happened to them. And this is what we are going to talk about today, some of the best documented cases where the dead have seemed to rise right out of there graves to contact the living. These spirits will not rest until the world knows who it was that committed these unspeakable crimes. February 21st, a Filipino nurse named Teresita Basa was tragically stabbed to death in her apartment, she lived in Evanston, Illinois. Forensic evidence suggested that Basa let a man into her apartment. And this man choked her, then stripped her, then started to stab her between the ribs multiple times. The force of these stab wounds was so strong that the knife went completely through her body. When she woke up she saw Basa standing right in front of her. Remy started screaming her head off and she ran away as fast as she could. Remy was convinced that these were not dreams, these were actual events that she was seeing. After this spine chilling incident Remy stopped having these dreams and she hoped that finally this whole nightmare was over. Finally, Remy decided that this was never going to stop until the murderer was in jail. So Remy went to the police and told them everything. The police thought that this women was crazy. But thankfully the police did check up on this. But when the police talked to the suspects girlfriend they finally got a lead, a lead that came from beyond the grave. When the police questioned Aliens girlfriend they asked her if Alien had given her any jewelry recently, the girlfriend said yes and she showed the police a beautiful antique ring. Now the police had the evidence they needed and they raided Aliens house. And Alien eventually confessed to the murder. Making this case some great proof of life beyond the grave, as there was just no way Remy Chua could know these things. The boy ran to his mother and told her that Elva was dead. The coroner official stated that the cause of death was everlasting faint, then the coroner changed it to complications from pregnancy. She said that her daughter started appearing to her in her dreams. In a fit of rage he started to choke Elva, he was choking her with so much force that he broke her neck. She spent the whole afternoon at his office trying to get the prosecutor to reopen the case. After a very large investigation the investigators uncovered that Shue was married twice before. After hearing of this the prosecutor and the investigation team suspected that Shue did in fact kill his wife, and a trial began. After the end of a very long trial the jury had no doubts, Shue was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison. The Red Barn Murder: The Red Barn Murder is one of the most famous cases in regards to the dead communicating with the living. This tragic story begins in Suffolk England in A young woman named Maria Marten was shot dead by her lover William Corder. The two had arranged to meet at the red barn. And Maria was never heard from again. He did as his wife instructed and he fell to the ground crying as he did find his daughters remains. William Corder was found guilty on August 11, He was taken to the gallows and hung for his crimes. Before Williams walked the gallows he finally confessed to murdering Maria, as William wanted a clean slate before he died.
