

Chapter 1 : Fundamental Things Apply by Marilyn Tracy

The Fundamental Things Apply is the 5th episode of Season 4 on WB drama Gilmore Girls. What do you say when there's nothing to talk about? Rory's (Alexis Bledel) first college date is a dud.

Garak and Bashir try a holosuite program and things go awry. Garak Chapter Text Garak leaned against the railing of the mezzanine and surveyed his establishment with a rare feeling of fulfilment. It felt good to be on top of things. The head waiter, Otto, noticed him looking and gave him a respectful nod. While the sting of exile would never completely vanish, there was something comforting in presiding over such a well-run place. He straightened up and began to head back toward his office when a voice called out from below. Computer, decrease brightness by 10 percent. There was a bulky instrument called a piano in the middle of the room and sunlight streamed through windows facing a busy street. Lace curtains obscured the scene outside, but he could hear primitive motorized vehicles and people talking as they walked by on the pavement outside. There were only a few other patrons inside. He looked around the room slowly. I know, but I think you might enjoy 20th century Paris. This program is supposed to be based on a famous old Earth story. I think you might enjoy it. A bit on the nose, maybe, but it was a relief to be able to just exist somewhere with Dr. Bashir without scrutiny, anger or half-mumbled slurs. They toured the city, took long walks, went to restaurants and nightclubs and, after some prodding, Garak even let Bashir drive them out into the countryside in one of the terrifying vehicles people of that period used. By their third visit, the war and impending invasion were no longer ignorable and the tension permeated every aspect of life in the city. It was decided that they should leave before the occupational forces arrived. Garak considered requesting that they disable the story function and just continue as before, but he could tell Dr. Bashir wanted something more exciting. He looked around the crowded transit platform impatiently. It seemed like half the city had decided to get out before the invading army arrived. On top of that, the weather had taken a turn for the worse. What was taking Bashir so long? Wherever they ended up, he hoped it would be warmer because the bitterly cold rain certainly felt real. He- he checked out of the hotel. Garak tried to keep his thoughts straight. Where else could he have gone? Garak fought back dizziness. He read it again as raindrops stained the paper. It was only a holonovel. He knew that, but still. Then would you like to come back to my quarters for a drink? I could read one of those awful enigma tales to you. Are we still on for lunch? He felt reasonably sure that Quark, who seemed to have enough good sense to be afraid of him, was being discreet. He watched his lunch companion nibble at his rather sad-looking sandwich. It must be at least 25 degrees outside. Tell me, have you finished the arrangements for your distinguished visitors? The prefect of police smiled grimly. You can never be too careful with these people. Everything has to be perfect. And now with this business of the missing documents and the two murdered couriers Garak did his best to keep the pleased expression off his face. Just thinking about enforcing such a system was enough to give him a headache. He kept those thoughts to himself and instead considered what this meant in for the story. The Germans are insistent that they remain here. It seemed that humans could be subtle occasionally. Garak concedes the point with a nod. His friend seemed to have given up on his food. That included the territory they currently resided in, which was part of some sort of colony. Even without much knowledge of the conflict, it was clear to Garak that the people who made up this so-called government were little more than tools for the occupying power. This is the first time he mentioned it outright, though. No self-respecting Cardassian would ever broach such a delicate topic in public, with a casual acquaintance no less. They really ought to work on their off-putting directness. Not too bad, he thought. Remind you of the old days, Elim? Back when you had a real purpose? He pushed the bitter voice in his head aside. Now was the time to focus. This evening would provide him his chance to confront Bashir and gain the upper hand in this ridiculous little drama. His interactions with the doctor when they met at the holosuite this evening had been awkward, like all their interactions since Paris. Now things might actually change. He knew better than to be overconfident at such an early stage, but things were already going his way. The most important event of the evening so far, however, was the arrival of a Ferengi-like petty criminal and black marketeer named Olano who had solved one mystery by asking Garak to hold on to two letters of transit he was intending to sell that evening. The documents were a perfect match to the description of those stolen from the dead couriers earlier that week and now Garak was the only one who knew where they were. Why people in this simulation kept insisting on trusting him, he had no idea. He turned to the kotra board on his desk. The next few moves could determine the outcome of the game. Impractical, surely, but they certainly beat those Starfleet monstrosities. Bashir manages to look so attractive in that garish excuse for a uniform is nothing short of a wonder. A dull and unchallenging game. Is there something I can do for you, Captain? The captain must be referring to Olano. He made sure to keep his expression neutral as he turned back to his game. Thank you for letting me know. Garak tried his best to suppress his amusement. Garak had concluded that it was remarkable that the Terran people managed to survive long enough to get to space at all. I can assure you. After a few minutes spent on deciding which of his glinns to move, he checked his reflection in the mirror again before descending the staircase. Bashir was definitely here. Then he saw them. Captain Moreau and Major Albrecht standing near a table with a beautiful human woman with dark swept-up hair and a small scar above her right eye. Next to her in a well-tailored gray suit sat Julian Bashir. The doctor smiled back, sheepishly. You know each other! Do you mind if I sit? What is it you want? Bashir is to remain as well. It just showed that one could never be too careful when choosing friends. I suggest you look into that. Garak felt something twist in his stomach. Get ahold of yourself. For a fleeting moment he was reminded of another doctor, but he pushed that thought down before it could be fully formed. You should listen to her. I know you hate synthale. Julian Chapter Text Julian glared across the table at Garak, who was drinking his wine at an alarming speed and clearly making an effort to keep his facial features neutral. I was just thinking that if this is how you would go about conducting interrogations, you should probably stick to your original career.

I thought you might want to say goodbye. Through the days when Jackson had wanted to end it all, had begged him and Hazel to help him. To overcome all that only to lose him not that many years later was unfair. She and Jackson had become so close it was like he had come alive again. He makes himself move, smiles a little at the picture by the bed, the three of them at the beach the past summer. It had been a good holiday, even if most of the days had been spent indoors thanks to the rain. Some days he barely had a minute to himself, except late at night when he could finally be alone and all he wanted was to be held. His family have been amazing, have sorted everything out, even taking turns to stay over with the two of them the past week or so, but now he wants them to leave. They have to start coping alone. He feels his sister nod against his chest. Go on, have a good time. The room is almost alien to him. Now it feels too big, the bed and all the equipment gone. Cain sees him first, tries to thrust a can into his hand but he brushes it away, instead moving closer and asking him to get rid of them all. He knows he can trust his uncle not to make a fuss. Our Aaron wants his house back. He nods his thanks and moves over to his Mum. He needs to do this though, and she gets that. It had been the four of them, Liv at the pub for the night. He just slides down the door, sitting on the carpet, too exhausted to do anything else. I wanted to spend the day with you. He forces himself to get up, pulls on a t-shirt and goes downstairs, after checking on Liv who thankfully is still sleeping. Come and sit down. I miss him Mum, it hurts. Change of scenery might help. A couple of nights. That starts the tears off again. Is that what I am? Nicola and Jimmy are downsizing. He was complaining about it the other day. He needs people around him, so does Liv. It might be the perfect solution. Tug Ghyll is his, Jackson left it to him, he could probably manage to buy the bigger house. Talk to Liv, have a look at it, get Jimmy to hold off the sale for a bit, until you decide. Come on, before Liv scoffs all our dinner. It had taken months to get the Mill how they wanted. Now it felt like a home, his home. If he was honest with himself Tug Ghyll was never really his. I just saw Marlon coming up the road with another casserole dish in his hands. That was the first thing unpacked. This place looks great. The past months have been difficult, not least sharing the pub with his Mum again. This though, this was their new start, just the two of them. He can do as he pleases. Comfy furniture, bookshelves everywhere, desk by the window for when he gets his flights of fancy about writing a book. Most people would want to speak with their baby sister. I work with literal idiots, so do you want to tell me what you want? I just wanted to ask you if you were coming on Sunday. Do you even need to ask me? His Mum was an incredible cook. He would have put money on his Mum but he would have expected her to ask herself. Me and Andy will argue about something, then Dad will start in about my job. You and Mum will ask question after question. I could make something. When work has calmed down a bit, yeah? No, he needs to be really sure before he lets them meet. His Dad was always reading and they made the weekly trip to the small town library. Robert liked it, but they would always go near closing time when it was empty and to his four year old self it was scary. After that she would read to him every time they went in, keeping him company while his Dad found his books, or did the research for his latest project. Andy is married to Now, you know the way, yeah? I happened to be with him when he visited. Robert and I literally ran into each other. You always did know how to get ahead. When he was a kid he loved to come in here, watching his Dad bash away at, first a typewriter, and then an old boxy computer. He was never allowed to touch though. Just as the saying goes you can take the man out of Yorkshire. Nervous about meeting you all. Why had he expected anything to be different? I enjoy what I do, Dad. I wanted to give it to Chrissie. You told me that, when I was little. Not a thing to remember her? He can hear Victoria and Chrissie chatting away so he makes his escape up to his old bedroom. It confuses him that it hurts so much. Sarah is his Mum, the one he went to with grazed knees, with tales of school bullies, but a part of him still wanted to remember the woman who was part of him, and now there was nothing. I thought he had it. This was my engagement ring that your Grandfather gave to me. Is this about your job, what your Dad said? You must love her if you proposed. Tell me more about her. I was only there because my friend persuaded me. Maybe that was destiny. Like it was meant to be. It seemed like every channel was playing some version of Jingle Bells. Usually he scoffed at them, but tonight it was the best of a bad lot. What are your hopes and dreams? How old are you? Where are you calling from? This might be ridiculous, but it was at least making the journey pass a little quicker. Have you tried talking to your brother about this? Something in him feels so sad for her. I might be able to help. Maybe I can help. Who was calling at this time of night on Christmas Eve. He takes the phone, with a quick squeeze of her shoulder and goes into the living room. Liv called in to us about you. She thinks you need a new boyfriend. Had she been worrying about him, not upset for herself?

Chapter Text. Garak leaned against the railing of the mezzanine and surveyed his establishment with a rare feeling of fulfillment. There were still a few hours before opening time and he was already done with the day's administrative work.

When Emily and Richard keep Rory hostage for the entire evening, Lorelai overcomes her distaste for visiting her parents in order to be with Rory. Meanwhile, Luke continues to cope with the aftermath of a disastrous cruise with his soon-to-be-former wife. At her first Yale party, Rory finds herself trapped by twins who were instructed by Emily to find Rory and keep her safe. Episode While visiting Stars Hollow for the weekend, Rory encounters her ex-boyfriend Dean, who awkwardly invites her to his wedding the next day. Meanwhile, Taylor Doose, who controls the permit procedures for every building in town, irritates Lorelai and Sookie as they try to get construction started on their new Dragonfly Inn. The Fundamental Things Apply Episode Rory goes on her first date since ending her relationship with Jess and finds that college dating is not going to be easy. Lorelai invites Luke over for the traditional movie night she used to share with Rory. Later, Lorelai gets upset when she learns that the designer she just hired for the Dragonfly Inn used to work for Emily. Meanwhile, Rory has a tough time finding a decent place to study at Yale. The Festival of Living Art Episode Stars Hollow hosts the Festival of Living Art, an event in which the townspeople dress up and present tableaux imitating famous paintings. And Lane finds a great guitarist, Gil, but he is a lot older than everyone else in the band. Jason impresses Lorelai by manipulating Emily into inviting him to Friday night dinner so he can continue flirting with Lorelai. Meanwhile, surprised to see Nicole at the diner, Lorelai forces Luke to admit that he and Nicole have put their divorce on hold and are dating again. Meanwhile, Richard introduces Paris to his former classmate Asher Flemming, who is now a distinguished Yale professor. Later, Rory is astonished when she later spots Paris and the professor kissing. The Nanny and the Professor Episode While Lorelai and Sookie work on renovating their new inn, Michel clashes with a rival who he believes wants the manager position promised to Michel. And the incredibly efficient Lane intimidates Luke when she begins waiting tables at his diner. In the Clamor and the Clangor Episode Lorelai is upset to find out that Luke has gotten an apartment with Nicole in another town in Connecticut. Meanwhile, Rory remains attracted to a fellow student, William, after he rebuffs her invitation to date, and she is later humiliated to learn that he has been gossiping about her obsession with him. Also, when Lane sneaks out to perform with her band, Mrs. A Family Matter Episode Luke is wary when his flighty sister Liz arrives for an unexpected visit. Lorelai promises Jason that she will tell her parents about their relationship, but she reconsiders after Emily comments about how laughable it would be if Lorelai and Jason began dating. Meanwhile, when Paris confesses to Rory that her affair with the professor is becoming serious, Rory reminds Paris how badly she is treating her boyfriend, Jamie – so Paris breaks up with Jamie. Rory sees Jess sleeping in his car but walks away without speaking to him. Meanwhile, when Rory and Jess encounter each other for a third time, Rory tries to be the one who walks away, but Jess stops her and makes a shocking confession. The Incredible Sinking Lorelais Episode Although she is completely exhausted by her heavy workload at Yale, Rory is horrified when a professor suggests that she drop a class. She confesses her self-doubt to her former boyfriend Dean, who is working on the construction crew at the Dragonfly Inn. Meanwhile, frustrated because she can never reach Rory and by the nonstop work involved in getting the Dragonfly ready to open, Lorelai first accuses Sookie of not doing her fair share then turns to Luke for help and advice. Also, Richard becomes infuriated when he and Lorelai both get a sample of the nastiness that Gran usually reserves for Emily. Scene in a Mall Episode Rory encounters Dean for the second time at the Dragonfly Inn and gets a glimpse of his new life. Later, Lorelai and Rory decide to spend a day together at the mall, but they run into Emily and are caught up in her wild shopping spree. When Lorelai questions her mother on her out-of-control spending, Emily admits that she is getting revenge on Richard, who has been ignoring her to concentrate on his new business. Emily handles the funeral arrangements with her usual efficiency – until she finds a letter Gran had written to Richard years earlier, begging him not to marry Emily. Lorelai is forced to take over the preparations, leading to her own small breakdown while buying new clothing for Gran to be buried in. Amidst sun, sand and too much partying, they meet Madeline and Louise, their pals from Chilton. And Luke needs Lorelai to bail him out of jail after he reacts badly to the news that his estranged wife is dating another man. Floyd also reveals that Jason and Lorelai have been dating secretly for months. Meanwhile, Dean upsets Rory when he admits he has dropped out of college to work full time so he and his wife, Lindsay, can buy a townhouse. Lindsay demands that Dean stop associating with Rory, but Dean and Rory plan to secretly remain in contact. Afterboom Episode When Jason reveals that he is no longer in business with Richard, Lorelai has an ugly confrontation with her father about his treatment of Jason. Meanwhile, Luke tells Lorelai that he and Nicole are getting a divorce. Luke Can See Her Face Episode Depressed over the failure of his marriage, Luke resorts to a self-help tape and suddenly realizes that he already knows who his soul mate is. Later, when his sister Liz returns to town and announces that she and T. Meanwhile, Lorelai is completely stressed as opening day at The Dragonfly Inn approaches, and Rory pretends not to be interested when Lorelai tells her she overheard Dean and his wife, Lindsay fighting. Jess walks Liz down the aisle, and Lorelai and Luke share a romantic dance, after which Luke asks Lorelai out on a date. Meanwhile, as Yale students begin their summer break, Rory attends a drunken party and has to call Dean to drive her back to the dorm. Dean tries to explain his unhappy marriage to Rory, but they are interrupted when Jess arrives and makes Rory a surprising offer. Using the opportunity to force her parents to reconcile, Lorelai is shocked when it becomes obvious that the damage to their marriage is greater than she had thought. When Jason arrives at the Inn to convince Lorelai that their own breakup was a mistake, Luke tries to declare his true feelings for Lorelai. Meanwhile, after their last awkward encounter, Rory attempts to salvage her friendship with Dean. Join the UP Email List!

And he did it by taking a straw and just blowing in a glass of water. But mainly they were vocals. During World War II, the public took comfort in the words to songs, which often evoked loved ones at home or the prospect of peace. He could just play chords. And so he started a small group after college. Cloud, MN, then were awarded the contract to furnish music during the summer of at Pettibone Lodge, a popular resort in Detroit, MN. Afterwards, they went on tour. Western Union was a telegraph service which dated back to the s, sending messages, for a fee, across the country. As a discography of the band [ 1. The man believed to be Bulowski is wearing a different outfit, seemingly in the role of leader. Kinkle states that Bulowski had a "lucrative business promoting and booking other bands," and maintains that, after a time, Duppler took over The Californians, as well as the name "Tommy Tucker. I just remembered, we carried three arrangers with us, and Tommy arranged that himself. That was what he loved to do: Tucker enjoyed the celebrity that went with being a popular bandleader. In fact, by the time he and Dare met, he had set down his trombone, instead concentrating on rehearsing and conducting the ensemble. Still, he maintained a set of standards for the musicians in his band. Unfortunately, other than Alexander, who is age 90 at this writing, time has taken its toll on the list of sidemen. Also believed to be still living is the wife of Tucker pianist Hal Dorfler who changed his name to Dennis. I think I talked to her about a year ago," Dare said. Vocalists featured by Tucker included Kerwin Somerville, who doubled on baritone saxophone and was present for over a dozen years, starting in ; Amy Arnell [ shown with Tucker, 1. There was also a popular and versatile vocal group. She used to babysit for me," Dare recalled. That was a lot of money then. A lot of the leaders were alcoholics, at that point. And a lot of the other bands were swapping One of our fellows could get a nice bid from, say, Glenn Miller We devised a plan - Tommy thought of this idea of letting a man travel with his wife or child under 6 years of age. So we started traveling with wives, and it was, like, five wives and four children. That kept our personnel steady. You can see why if a man could take his wife. We were the only band doing that, that I know of. We were married in ," she reminded me. So, when I met him, you know, I thought it was wonderful. I was on Broadway for a couple years," she reminisced. The only money I was able to make at that time was I was doing commercials, radio commercials. I was doing commercials, and I did some modeling, and about that time, I met him. He was playing in New Jersey. In about two weeks, I got up my nerve and I wrote him a letter. I was scared, so I told him I was busy. I was too scared to see him. And he called me again, and so I went out with him, that time. And so I gave up my career and started producing his show, because I had learned a little bit about that. I had been given lessons in producing, so I knew a little bit about it. And at that time, theaters became important for bands, not just dance halls and parks and all, but a lot of theaters. We were busy, it was during the War and we were playing every Army camp and every Naval base in the country, I think. I was producing the shows at that point I used to worry about that, but it was a great thrill for us to play for the young men. That was, sort of, our contribution. And Tommy was too old, at the time, to be in the service. We had hired a bus from Greyhound, at the time, and, of course, had it outfitted for our specifications and had the name of the band on the side. That was publicity as we traveled around, you know. I think all the bands did that. And I loved the Palmer House. But I thought it was the most beautiful place to eat, and, as the leader, of course, we were given a beautiful suite in the hotel and, at that time, it was on the top floor. That was called the Stevens [ picture 1. Why did she hate it? And pretty soon, television took over, and that was the downfall of the big bands. I came to a fork in the road. The left fork would take me to an open highway where I had spent a quarter of a century of endless miles and sleepless nights as we jumped from one city to another, the task of setting up the band, playing the job, packing up the instruments early in the morning, and getting on the bus to continue ever onward; but the fork to the right took me to the college and home every night. But we came home, and, by this time, we had two children. And the business was really falling apart. Joyce Record Club, Marquis Company, , p. Alumni Magazine, The, Apr.
