He hoped to one day be an illustrator in western books and magazines by authors like Zane Grey and Bret Harte. There, he used his artistic interest to create sketches of his activities in the South Pacific. While serving in New Guinea, he saw natives creating decorative designs in leather and became curious about exploring the art. He and a few friends used pocket knives to carve the leather and created rudimentary tools out of nails shaped into various forms. He moved to Laguna Canyon where he settled in a shack that he made from an abandoned chicken coop. There he took care of horses and began earning income through his amateur leatherwork when he started purchasing plain saddles and decorating them to be sold at auction for a profit. Stohlman initially learned to make functional leather items beginning with suitcases and other simple projects until Lauderbach eventually taught him how to build and design saddles. McGahan hired Stohlman to design leatherworking tools and to write publications, earning national attention with his first book, "How To Carve Leather". The Stohlmans went on to publish a substantial catalog of texts about the fundamentals of leathercraft. And being a realist, I feel a picture or scene must be authentic in detail, so it takes time. Recipients of the medal are recognized on the basis of their overall achievements in leathercraft. She was raised by her father, Jack Lloyd, and grew up in logging camps where he worked. There, she learned about living in nature, how to fish, the use of fire arms, and how to hunt. The two corresponded by mail and were married on August 20, in Tijuana, Mexico. Ann became quite an accomplished leatherworker, collaborating on many of his books and having her work featured in a number of publications. Just as Al had taught Ann leathercraft, she taught him how to hunt and live off of the land, as she had in her youth. Al Stohlman; Ann Stohlman *The Art of Embossing Leather.
