Head back to the late s and especially the s. They were ridiculously outpaced by their Original Six counterparts. The Red Wings made some real bonehead moves back then. Most notably they alienated a young Marcel Dionne and later let him get away. Another young star they chased out of town was Garry Unger, all because of his hair. In the Wings had an old school coach named Ned Harkness. Harkness and Unger clashed almost immediately. Unger, who scored 42 goals as a sophomore in , had a somewhat misplaced reputation as a playboy. He was good looking with rosy cheeks, and he wore colorful clothes. His signature had to be his shoulder length blonde hair. He was known to use a hair dryer as much as a hockey blade torch. And hey it must have worked, as he was dating Miss America in . It may have been the 70s, but Harkness would have none of this. He ordered all of his players to get crew-cuts. Louis in exchange for expansion scoring star Red Berenson. It turned out to be a terrible trade for the Wings. Berenson had a couple of solid seasons in Detroit, but he was near the end. In each of his 8 seasons as Mr. Blue he scored at least 30 goals. Year-in and year-out he would lead the Blues in most offensive categories. Of course Unger also became known as Mr. Unger never missed a game until December 22, , then playing with the Atlanta Flames. The ironman record has since been upped to games by Doug Jarvis. Unger loved the horses and the outdoors. Instead of partying in the city for a night on the town, he spent more of his free time dirt biking, mountain climbing and water skiing. Unger always remained a free spirit. One off-season he decided to drive cross-country in a convertible with the top down. Even when he hit heavy rains he would keep the rag top collapsed, claiming "it gave me a sense of accomplishment. But he was never the most likely candidate to become a hockey star. His father, a member of the Canadian Army, build a rink in the backyard of the family home in Edmonton. Undaunted, Garry painted them back and taught himself to skate. He would move to southern Ontario and play with the London Nationals. Garry barely had a chance to play for the Leafs. Garry Unger moved to Detroit where his famous battle over his hair would be waged. Towards the end of his career he came to realize that perhaps success came too early in Detroit, and that the best thing that ever happened to him was the trade to St. Louis where he would escape the limelight somewhat and mature as a person and a player. Unger finished his career with parts of three seasons in his hometown of Edmonton. Unger retired from the NHL in . He played in games, scored goals, assists and total points. He would briefly come out of retirement and play in Great Britain later in the s. His playboy lifestyle well behind him, he became quite religious while spending much of his post-playing days riding buses and coaching the low minor leagues. Posted by Joe Pelletier at
