General Hospital, which celebrated its 55th anniversary on April 1, , continues its tradition of passion, intrigue and adventure that takes place in the fictional town of Port Charles in.

Early examples[edit] View of the Askleipion of Kos , the best preserved instance of an Asklepieion. The earliest documented institutions aiming to provide cures were ancient Egyptian temples. In ancient Greece , temples dedicated to the healer-god Asclepius , known as Asclepieia functioned as centres of medical advice, prognosis, and healing. Fa Xian , a Chinese Buddhist monk who travelled across India ca. The heads of the Vaisya [merchant] families in them [all the kingdoms of north India] establish in the cities houses for dispensing charity and medicine. All the poor and destitute in the country, orphans, widowers, and childless men, maimed people and cripples, and all who are diseased, go to those houses, and are provided with every kind of help, and doctors examine their diseases. They get the food and medicines which their cases require, and are made to feel at ease; and when they are better, they go away of themselves. This text, which describes the building of a hospital is dated by Dominik Wujastyk of the University College London from the period between B. This is the earliest documentary evidence we have of institutions specifically dedicated to the care of the sick anywhere in the world. While their existence is considered proven, there is some doubt as to whether they were as widespread as was once thought, as many were identified only according to the layout of building remains, and not by means of surviving records or finds of medical tools. Byzantine medicine and Ancient Iranian medicine A physician taking the pulse of a patient. The declaration of Christianity as an accepted religion in the Roman Empire drove an expansion of the provision of care. Following the First Council of Nicaea in A. Among the earliest were those built by the physician Saint Sampson in Constantinople and by Basil, bishop of Caesarea in modern-day Turkey. Called the "Basiliad", the latter resembled a city and included housing for doctors and nurses and separate buildings for various classes of patients. Thus in-patient medical care in the sense of what we today consider a hospital, was an invention driven by Christian mercy and Byzantine innovation. By the twelfth century, Constantinople had two well-organised hospitals, staffed by doctors who were both male and female. Facilities included systematic treatment procedures and specialised wards for various diseases. A large percentage of the population were Syriacs , most of whom were Christians. Under the rule of Khusraw I , refuge was granted to Greek Nestorian Christian philosophers including the scholars of the Persian School of Edessa Urfa also called the Academy of Athens , a Christian theological and medical university. These scholars made their way to Gundeshapur in A. They were engaged in medical sciences and initiated the first translation projects of medical texts. During this period, hospitals were mainly confined to the domestic household or existed as small, military hospitals with the function of caring to the sick, travellers, and of the long-term infirm. Church-sponsored hospitals began to appear already after A. Over the next seven centuries, the hospitals gradually passed from Church to monastic control. Soon many Christian monasteries became centers of accumulation of the medical knowledge and practical experience in Europe. Benedict of Nursia A. Benedict , today the patron saint of Europe, established the first monastery in Europe Monte Cassino on a hilltop between Rome and Naples , that became a model for the Western monasticism and one of the major cultural centers of Europe throughout the Middle Ages, where he wrote the "Rule", containing directions for monks and Christians. The Rule of Saint Benedict is one of the most important written works in the shaping of Western civilian society because it included a written constitution, authority limited by law, and a degree of democracy. Besides, it mandated the moral obligations to care for the sick. In Monte Cassino St. Benedict founded a hospital that is considered today to have been the first hospital in Europe of the new era. The monastic routine called for hard work. The care of the sick was such an important duty that those caring for them were enjoined to act as if they served Christ directly. Since that time the Benedictines were very involved in healing and caring for the sick and dying, so in many cases early Medieval medicine was closely connected with Christianity and the Benedictines in particular. This is why very often the early Middle Ages are called "the Benedictine centuries". Medieval Islamic world[edit] Main articles: Medicine in medieval Islam , Bimaristan , and Dar al-Shifa Entrance to the Qawaloon complex which housed the notable Qawaloon hospital. The earliest general hospital was built in Baghdad by Harun Al-Rashid. In Islam, there was a moral imperative to treat the ill regardless of financial status. Islamic hospitals tended to be large, urban structures, and were largely secular institutions, many open to all, whether male or female, civilian or military, child or adult, rich or poor, Muslim or non-Muslim. The Islamic hospital served several purposes, as a center of medical treatment, a home for patients recovering from illness or accidents, an insane asylum, and a retirement home with basic maintenance needs for the aged and infirm. Every department had an officer-in-charge, a presiding officer and a supervising specialist. The hospitals also had lecture theaters and libraries. Hospitals staff included sanitary inspectors, who regulated cleanliness, and accountants and other administrative staff. Cities also had first aid centers staffed by physicians for emergencies that were often located in busy public places, such as big gatherings for Friday prayers to take care of casualties. The region also had mobile units staffed by doctors and pharmacists who were supposed to meet the need of remote communities. The test had two steps; the first was to write a treatise, on the subject the candidate wished to obtain a certificate, of original research or commentary of existing texts, which they were encouraged to scrutinize for errors. The second step was to answer questions in an interview with the chief medical officer. Physicians worked fixed hours and medical staff salaries were fixed by law. The hospitals had male and female quarters while some hospitals only saw men and other hospitals, staffed by women physicians, only saw women. In Europe, Spanish hospitals are particularly noteworthy examples of Christian virtue as expressed through care for the sick, and were usually attached to a monastery in a ward-chapel configuration, most often erected in the shape of a cross. This style reached a high point during the hospital building campaign of Portuguese St. By the 11th century, some monasteries were training their own physicians. Ideally, such physicians would uphold the Christianized ideal of the healer who offered mercy and charity towards all patients and soldiers, whatever their status and prognosis might be. In the 6th–12th centuries the Benedictines established lots of monk communities of this type. And later, in the 12th–13th centuries the Benedictines order built a network of independent hospitals, initially to provide general care to the sick and wounded and then for treatment of syphilis and isolation of patients with communicable disease. The hospital movement spread through Europe in the subsequent centuries, with a bed hospital being built at York in and even larger facilities established at Florence, Paris, Milan, Siena, and other medieval big European cities. In the North during the late Saxon period, monasteries, nunneries, and hospitals functioned mainly as a site of charity to the poor. After the Norman Conquest of , hospitals are found to be autonomous, freestanding institutions. They dispensed alms and some medicine, and were generously endowed by the nobility and gentry who counted on them for spiritual rewards after death. The primary function of medieval hospitals was to worship to God. Most hospitals contained one chapel, at least one clergyman, and inmates that were expected to help with prayer. Worship was often a higher priority than care and was a large part of hospital life until and long after the Reformation. Worship in medieval hospitals served as a way of alleviating ailments of the sick and insuring their salvation when relief from sickness could not be achieved. Charity provided by hospitals surfaced in different ways, including long-term maintenance of the infirm, medium-term care of the sick, short-term hospitality to travellers, and regular distribution of alms to the poor. For example, some institutions that perceived themselves mainly as a religious house or place of hospitality turned away the sick or dying in fear that difficult healthcare will distract from worship. Others, however, such as St. James of Northallerton, St. Giles of Norwich, and St. Leonard of York, contained specific ordinances stating they must cater to the sick and that "all who entered with ill health should be allowed to stay until they recovered or died". Originally, hospitals educated chaplains and priestly brothers in literacy and history; however, by the 13th century, some hospitals became involved in the education of impoverished boys and young adults. Soon after, hospitals began to provide food and shelter for scholars within the hospital in return for helping with chapel worship. Giles in Norwich, St. Giles, along with St. St Giles, Norwich[edit] The ruins of St. Discrepancies exist among sources regarding the founding of St. Giles of Norwich, or the " Great Hospital " as it is known today. Some sources maintain that it was founded in The gardens were so productive that surplus goods were sold on the open market. St Giles of Norwich owned six manors and advowson of eleven churches. For example, in St Giles, the master and brothers ate in the common hall while sisters ate by themselves. St Giles was also wealthy enough to maintain its own kitchen and staff. This allowed poor men to receive a dish of meat, fish, eggs or cheese in addition to the customary daily ration of bread and drink. To prevent its degradation, the hospital petitioned for a chapel on the bishop's terms. Giles, there was insufficient land at St. Some of the spices bought include, saffron, cloves, ginger, cinnamon, lavender, pepper and mustard. According to quarterly expenditure reports, fifty-eight percent of the quarterly budget was spent on meat, thirty-four percent on fish, three percent on pottage, two percent on dairy, one percent herbs and one percent on eggs. In addition to its reputation of spending lavishly on food, St. The pigs were fed through charity or by scavenging and later, when their condition improved, they were then taken by the hospital for use as food for the poor or sick. In , John Carpenter, the master of St. Anthony London, was able to finance a grammar school whose teachings were without fees to any student.
