Although the Packers are at their best when Rodgers is gun-slinging , this Packers defense and offense have obvious weaknesses. This slideshow requires JavaScript. The line calls and audibles that Rodgers makes are difficult to get a handle on. Even with the brace, Rodgers was extremely effective and still maintained the ability to throw on the run. Although Williams and Montgomery only combined for 90 yards vs Minn. This is a unit that Washington needs to take seriously. On many occasions versus the Vikings, the pair bailed out Rodgers after Minnesota stacked the box. The Green Bay special teams unit is active around the ball and dangerous blocked punt returned for TD vs Minn The Green Bay offense is carrying the team while their rebuilt defense is maturing. How Can the Redskins Win? The Redskins seem to have an offensive advantage over Green Bay. The Packers frequently play man press coverage with a single high safety, as opposed to Indianapolis and Arizona who played mostly zone. In the Colts game, they played a soft, off-coverage zone that gave the Redskins underneath routes, but took away the sidelines and the middle of the field. The Redskins receivers, although underwhelming, have an opportunity to get one on one coverage all day. The concept is simple and it gives the receiver a variety of route options based on the defensive coverage. Reed will be matched up with a linebacker or safety, so look for this as an area to utilize. The Redskins need to establish the run. This is the obvious topic among Redskins Nation, but the elements could be a factor. Throwing the ball could be an issue, so getting Peterson and Thompson featured should be a priority. The recent news of Kelley out with a toe injury puts Samja Perine as the other back to be activated on game day. The Redskins defensive lineman need to collapse the pocket and bring pressure. That needs to change versus Rodgers. If the Redskins hope to have success at beating Green Bay and stopping Rodgers, the pressure needs to come off the edges. Rodgers needs to feel the heat from the start. Getting him down and keeping him down might be the only way for Washington to get the W. Final Burgundy and Gold Report Prediction: Who is Kenny Ladler? The Packers might be playing Sunday without one of their best wide receivers -- Jordy Nelson ribs -- but remain very much in the mix thanks to a series of transcendent performances from quarterback Aaron Rodgers and his supporting cast. It was one of several game-changing or game-saving plays made directly by Rodgers, leaving me to believe that we will be treated to yet another evolution in his performance level this winter. In some ways, the Falcons come into this game reminding me of the Patriots. They are a team that can convert from five-wide to power mode relatively quickly and, at the same time, use the balance between their two offensive styles to puzzle the opposing defense. Just like Rodgers is in a zone, the same can be said for Falcons offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan and quarterback Matt Ryan. Their ability to spot weakness and tendency in real time is uncanny, and has not diminished with the spotlight on them this postseason. Under pressure Falcons ownership: While this club will still draw -- Ryan and Julio Jones are fun to watch, regardless of the situation -- the Falcons will more than likely have a different look next year. Thirty-five points a game at home will probably go with it. The window is by no means closing on this group -- some of their best players are first or second-year stars still firmly under team control -- but the window to make a great first impression is. Matchup to watch Vic Beasley vs. Bryan Bulaga and TJ Lang: He was equally effective as a spy, often standing up, grappling with a defensive end and shadowing the quarterback as he danced around in the pocket to try and find an open receiver. Wilson and Rodgers have similar pocket mobility and I would not be surprised to see Beasley used in a similar agent-of-chaos type role. Rodgers seems infinitely more comfortable when there is a clean and wide pocket to shuffle around. While many pass rushers have tried and failed to bring Rodgers down, there probably will not be a more athletic pass rusher left to face in this postseason. Beasley also drew some advantageous double teams against the Seahawks last weekend that were not taken advantage of. I have a feeling coach Dan Quinn has something up his sleeve. Prediction While some of this confidence is dependent on Jones recovering quickly and maintaining his physical style throughout, I see the game tipping toward Atlanta. And then there is this: Buoyed by a well-versed, powerful running game and the only offensive line in football to play all 17 games together this season, it just seems practical to bet on the home team in this one.
