The life of George Freeman Book Number: Chris and Joe take to the road, touring the highways and byways of Australia on a quest to discover what became of the Holden Piazza - possibly the dodgiest car ever to be imported into Australia. This unique beachside suburb photographed between - Includes 2 hand coloured postcards. There are lots of travel books and magazines, but few describe the mood and atmosphere of a location quite like Balmoral: Every man and his dog. Photographer Robert Billington has captured moments that pass by most of us, otherwise unobserved and unappreciated. Every man and his dog presents a portfolio of carefully handcrafted black and white photographs, individually toned and, in some cases, creatively coloured. It contrasts the Balmoral of today with a written account of its past. Drawing on extensive primary sources, Aughton recounts voyage from preparations to homecoming. The narrative is sometimes difficult to follow. It was an exciting, magnificent adventure, personally, politically and in the name of science. Fans of Dava Sobel will be interested to see where this journey fits into the history of longitude: Harrison had invented his marine clock but this expedition could not afford such an expensive tool from the cutting edge. Instead, an astronomer made observations and referred to the nautical almanac which was only current for the first year of the voyage and they also plotted by dead reckoning literally measuring their progress - not very accurate.
