Chapter 2 : THE HOPES OF SNAKES by Lisa Couturier | Kirkus Reviews

The Hopes of Snakes is an eloquent and powerful debut by one With sharp perception and deep humanity, she has found what is so remarkable in the nature we see most often and illuminated it like no one before her.

Couturier is one of the very few writers who actively explores nature in the urban and suburban landscape. In particular, she writes about those forgotten, overlooked animals that survive amidst concrete, glass, and sprawl, among them snakes, geese, vultures, crows, and coyotes. She does so with deep humanity, eloquence, and power. The Hopes of Snakes is a wonderful collection of essays. And along with her animal subjects, she also writes about a remarkable cast of humans who care for the animals in their midst. The Hopes of Snakes is a terrific debut. Read it and see the natural world around you with new eyes. She makes a convincing case that a suburban woman with a toddler can have as viable a relationship with the wild as an intrepid backpacker; she does not so much domesticate the wilderness as reveal the wildness within the domestic. Whether the subject is a snake or a falcon or a crow named Edgar, these essays will both enlighten and give much reading pleasure. Let this lyrical, extraordinary book lure you into the urban thickets and vales of foxes, vultures, coyotes, serpents and geese--and inspire you to recapture the wild heart that keeps us truly alive. This book is a keeper, a teacher. In her mastery of the essay as an expressive form, and in the power and sincerity of her thinking, Lisa Couturier has established herself as the literary equal of such contemporary luminaries as Linda Hogan, Diane Ackerman and Barbara Kingsolver. Dixon, collects pieces that confront the nature found in urban environments. The assumptions we make about nature writing too often lead us to see it only as literature about wilderness or rural areas. City Wilds broadens our awareness of American nature writing by featuring the flora, fauna, geology, and climates that enrich and shape urban life. City Wilds revises our traditional views of what nature is, locating it in less obvious places. These stories are testimonials to the power of place in our lives. Heart of a Nation: Highlighted by breathtaking images featuring thoughtful, evocative prose by award-winning authors, Heart of a Nation ranges from Vermont to Alaska, from the Appalachian foothills to the lofty peaks of the Sierra, from the still ponds of our southeastern wetlands to the stormy shores of the Pacific Northwest. American Nature Writing, A Celebration of Women Writers Essay: The contributors include three generations of women writers, both new and distinguished voices. This time around, all the contributors are women. This is a strong and worthy compilation.
