Chapter 1 : Peter Cyril Bauer, Founder at Mimecast Ltd. - Relationship Science

Idion Technology Holdings Limited, is an investment holding company, that operates through its subsidiaries, which provides software, services, and support solutions for managing a company's.

Idion develops and owns software that permits continuous data availability on single mainframe computers. This is serious software and IBM supports Idion to the hilt. By the end of Idion hit a high of R24, but since then it has been a sorry tale. The share fell steadily until it languished at around 30 cents in January this year. As a result, Idion would record a loss for the year ended December 31, This was when things began to get interesting and value investing came into play. Probably the only thing one can say with certainty is that the value is somewhere between 30 cents and R Idion published its December results on February The statements under "Group Prospects" were muted, containing such comments as: This was very gloomy and it was no wonder the share had collapsed. But while the price was in the doldrums, the action was building up behind the scenes. DataMirror, a Canadian-based information technology company that competes with Idion, was secretly acquiring its shares. On March 17, DataMirror an-nounced its offer to acquire the entire issued share capital of Idion - other than those shares it already held - at 65 cents a share. Idion and various institutions rejected the offer as being far too low and claimed that R3 would be a more realistic figure. The offer was again raised to R1. External advisers PricewaterhouseCoopers PwC were retained to advise on whether the revised offer was fair and reasonable. PwC concluded that the revised offer was significantly less than the true value of Idion and, accordingly, was not fair and reasonable to Idion shareholders. On Thursday this week, it was announced in the business dailies that Coronation had, in spite of previously claiming the share was worth much more, sold its 11 percent stake in Idion to DataMirror. DataMirror now holds 34 percent of the company and probably only needs one more large shareholder to change camp for it to seize control. The Idion saga sends many bright signals of hope. It is a vindication of the equity investment process and it shows that investment markets are still functioning well.

Idion Technology Holdings Limited is an information technology company. The Company develops and owns proprietary software as well as imports and distributes various software platforms from other.

Has Anglo done some research to come up with such a bland statement, or is it just that directors have taken a long look into their souls and come up with this conclusion? Of course, corporate governance is such a bland landscape of motherhood and apple-pie statements, it is easy for Anglo to get away with such a self- serving opinion. The survey ranked chief executive pay in against total shareholder return. Lindahl had been chief executive of Swiss-Swedish engineering group ABB when he lost a boardroom struggle initiated by concerns about strategy. Lindahl was controversially paid Sf85 million R million of benefits, including a Sf Controversy stemmed from the fact that he was instrumental in arranging the payment. It seems Anglo persuaded him to resign from the role of chairman designate. HCI management says the share is no longer attractive to institutions. Where to from here? Last year DataMirror made history by being the first foreign company to attempt a hostile takeover of a locally listed company. And Idion has managed to maintain interest in its shares by both new and old admirers. The relatively new admirer is VenFin, which holds about 6 percent. The old admirer is management, which holds 45 percent and recently bumped the share price, buying a lot of shares last month. DataMirror holds between 38 percent and 40 percent. Pops denies everything; DataMirror says a deal is a deal. This week there was a bid for 1 million shares. Word was the Canadians are on the prowl again. They only really have two options: Some argue that an interest rate cut after June might be the tonic, but the jury is out on that one. Some interesting perspectives arise from executives who have been on investment road shows in Europe and the US over the past few weeks. A representative of a large insurer was astounded at the change in attitude towards South Africa and the level of interest in our market. They were bullish about us and the government. They believed there were no strong price drivers in the near term and they had not been as concerned about empowerment as previously. Foreign investment holds the potential to spice up financial services share prices.
