Military[edit] Military personnel serving with the MFO wear national military dress appropriate to the climatic conditions of the Sinai except for some contingents like Uruguay, Australia and Fiji that keep the Jungle-type uniform. In the case of the U. Canada, Colombia, France, Hungary, New Zealand and Norway have all developed or adopted their own desert uniform for use in the Sinai and elsewhere. All contingents wear national flags or crests to identify their country of origin. All military members of the force wear a terracotta -colored beret or bush hat. Some contingents, such as that of Colombia , also wear terracotta neck scarves when on parade. During the s a terracotta-colored "ranger" patrol hat was also in use, but was discontinued by the s. UN peacekeeping forces wear a distinctive light blue beret. A metal or cloth MFO badge is worn on the beret. Civilian observers[edit] The 15 civilian observers employed by the MFO originally wore uniforms of highly visible orange a relic of the Sinai Field Mission, whose personnel wore such uniforms while carrying out their treaty verification duties. In , a change was made to a bright orange shirt worn with khaki trousers. The orange shirts have since been replaced by black polo shirts. These are commonly presented at contingent medal parades. Each six-month tour after that authorizes the wearer to place a number on their ribbon beginning with the number "2". Civilians employees of the Force are authorized to wear the MFO Civilian Medal [citation needed] for the same terms of service as peacekeepers. The mission of this augmented company size unit was to establish support facilities in preparation for the upcoming arrival of the infantry battalions to monitor the peace. This was not a typical U. Initially those who deployed were required to wear civilian clothing, due to the security threat. They arrived in the middle of the night and were bussed to Etam Air Base in Israel, which would later be renamed El Gorah after the April 25, transfer of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt. These soldiers were to prepare to assume the mission of the Sinai Field Mission. The goal was to establish a command structure, fixed and rotary aircraft support, parts support, water and petroleum supply, medical, logistics for the MFO, which would later assume the mission. It was several months before permanent buildings were in place. In April , the U. After serving a two-year posting in the Sinai Colonel Rabuka returned to Fiji in to plan and stage a bloodless military coup which toppled the elected Fijian government on 14 May The assassins poured automatic weapon fire into the reinforced rear window until they were able to penetrate the glass and strike the director-general in the head. Canada agreed to replace Australia in the MFO and to supply a helicopter squadron, staff officers and a flight-following section of air traffic controller s totalling military personnel. The st was rotating home from a tour of duty with the MFO. The accepted theory is that the crash was caused by ice accumulation on the leading surfaces of the wings, but debate and speculation still rages that the crash may have resulted from some type of incendiary device placed on the plane. Canadian tactical helicopter units rotated to El Gorah for six-month tours of duty. The primary units providing military personnel were , and Tactical Helicopter Squadrons and Squadron Helicopter Operational Training Squadron. Both crew members are injured, one seriously. This was due primarily to Canada accepting a new commitment to send a helicopter squadron to Central America with a UN peacekeeping force. He went on to become a South Australian politician after his military career. The incident [25] [26] [27] [28] [29] [30] came to light when one of the vehicle passengers, army Staff Sergeant David Hartshorn, reported it after he had been returned to Australia. Prima facie evidence of the incident was established and included in a formal inquiry by the Australian government in This battalion is composed of Reservists and National Guard smen in addition to active duty soldiers. Army used this group as a test to see if reservists could take over the mission in the future. The Hungarians replaced the Dutch contingent, and as well as military police include two members of the Force staff, a doctor and a liaison officer. The Canadians were only slightly injured. Units that were pulled together to complete the manning for the mission include elements of the th Armor and th Armor. Subsequently, over the course of three days, 3â€™5 February , CPU ships patrolled for more than 90 hours in severe weather conditions. Eight passengers were rescued by MFO vessels. All passengers and crew were serving members of the MFO, eight French and one Canadian, and all were killed. The aircraft reported trouble with one engine and was attempting an emergency landing on a highway when it struck a truck. It crashed and exploded moments later. The driver of the truck escaped unharmed. The first soldiers arrived in the Sinai on 17 November. Contingent members consist of three staff officers in the following key positions: All officers will serve a voluntary one-year tour of duty with the MFO. MFO soldiers defended the base and there was an exchange of fire. Four MFO members were reportedly wounded. Within these zones, Egypt and Israel were permitted varying degrees of military buildup: Between the Suez Canal and Line A. Egypt is permitted a mechanized infantry division with a total of 22, troops in Zone A. Between Line A and Line B. Egypt is permitted four border security battalions to support the civilian police in Zone B. Between Line B and the Egypt-Israel border. Between the Egypt-Israel border and Line D. Israel is permitted four infantry battalions in Zone D. Within Zone C there are two main installations: In addition there are thirty smaller sites at various points within Zone C. One remote observation post OP is located offshore on Tiran Island, requiring resupply by air or sea. The sectors are numbered from north to south and assigned: Life in the Sinai [edit] Maintaining a good quality of life for MFO members in the Sinai is difficult, due to the remoteness and desolation of the region as well as more recent security concerns. Gym facilities, clubs, medical facilities, libraries and exchanges are provided at both North Camp and South Camp. The Force has its own magazine, the bimonthly and bilingual Sandpaper. Members are encouraged to take visits to Israel and Egypt, usually in organized trips. A television and radio system also service North Camp and South Camp. At remote observation sites, which might house only a dozen peacekeepers, the quality of life is harder to maintain. During tours at remote sites peacekeepers have limited access to the internet, are provided with workout equipment, and are permitted mascots. Mascots are not allowed at the main camps, even though a veterinarian is available to maintain the health of the animals, which are almost always dogs. After the original inception of the MFO, routine travel to al-Arish, Sharm el Sheikh and a beach facility near the Gaza Strip were restful getaways but recent security concerns over possible Hamas activity has changed that. Similarly, a bicycle competition known as the Tour de Sinai which had begun in had gone by the wayside in recent years.

Seeking to understand this dynamic, he began to learn about the historical Silk Road, recognizing in it a model for productive cultural collaboration, for the exchange of ideas and tradition alongside commerce and innovation. And in a radical experiment, he brought together musicians from the lands of the Silk Road to co-create a new artistic idiom, a musical language founded in difference, a metaphor for the benefits of a more connected world. Silkroad has recorded seven albums. Honolulu-born bassist Shawn Conley won a position with the Honolulu Symphony while in high school and went on to earn degrees in Music Performance from Rice University. Nick performs internationally as an acclaimed soloist and guest chamber musician. A prize-winning violist in his student days at the Juilliard School and the Curtis Institute, he currently teaches in the graduate program at Stony Brook University in New York. Tabla virtuoso Sandeep Das is one of the few Indian classical musicians to have collaborated with major symphony orchestras, string quartets, and jazz musicians. Das is the founder of HUM Harmony and Universality through Music , which promotes global understanding through performance and education, and provides learning opportunities and scholarships for young, specially-abled artists to empower them to lead self-reliant lives. Das is trained in the centuries-old Indian tradition of Guru-Shishya Parampara, studying and living with his Guruâ€™Pandit Kishan Maharajâ€™and learning and practicing music as a way of life, more than just an art form. Last fall, Maeve premiered her original concerto for symphony orchestra and harp with the Western Piedmont symphony orchestra in North Carolina as a co-composition with Luke Benton. Maeve is an Adventure Music recording artist. Watanabe creates music that is at once personal, philosophical, meditative and virtuosic, that reflects his extensive background in Japanese traditional music, American jazz and his decades-long devotion to cross-cultural musical collaboration. Watanabe was a performer and artistic director of the internationally acclaimed Japanese taiko performing arts ensemble Kodo for close to a decade and who, as a soloist, has worked with such artists as National Living Treasure Bando Tamasaburo, jazz pianist Jason Moran, flamenco dancer Eva Yerbabuena and Yo-Yo Ma and the Silkroad Ensemble. He is also the featured taiko drummer and a musical advisor for the recent Wes Anderson film, Isle of Dogs. As a passionate educator, Watanabe has taught courses at Princeton and Wesleyan Universities, has been a faculty member at Tanglewood Music Festival. Watanabe also has a studio in Brooklyn that holds regular classes as well as hosts workshops by international master musicians and dancers. Watanabe is supported by the preeminent taiko maker Miyamoto Unosuke Shoten of Tokyo and master shinobue flute maker Ranjo of Chiba Prefecture. Friday, September 21,
