Listening One is able to listen and comprehend conversations about topics regularly encountered in daily life and classroom situations, and is able to pick up necessary information from short conversations spoken slowly. Scoring[ edit ] Passing is based on scaled scores calculated using item-response theory. Raw scores are not directly used to determine passing, nor are they reported, except in rough form in the "Reference Information" section. The scaled scores are reported, broken down by section, and these are the scores used to determine passing. This reference information is given for vocabulary, grammar, and reading on the N4 and N5, and for vocabulary and grammar but not reading on the N1, N2, and N3. In both cases, this breaks down the score on the "Language Knowledge" section into separate skills, but in neither case is performance on the listening section analyzed. Pass marks[ edit ] Passing the test requires both achieving an overall pass mark for the total points, and passing each section individually; these are based on the scaled scores. The sectional scores are to ensure that skills are not unbalanced. So one cannot pass by doing well on the written section but poorly on the listening section, for instance. Note that the sectional pass levels are below the overall pass level, at 100. These standards were adopted starting in July 2010, and do not vary from year to year, with the scaling instead varying. Pass marks for individual sections [20] Level.
