

Chapter 1 : Leonard Maltin's Movie Guide - Wikipedia

Leonard Maltin has been publishing his annual movie guide for well over 20 years, and it keeps improving. The edition includes over 18, movies, + more than the prior edition. Each review details the year of release, length, director, stars, brief plot description and critique, and other pertinent information.

He is married to researcher and producer Alice Tlusty, and has one daughter, Jessie, who works with him his production company, JessieFilm, is named for her. After earning a journalism degree at New York University , Maltin went on to publish articles in a variety of film journals, newspapers, and magazines, including Variety and TV Guide. In the s Maltin also reviewed recordings in the jazz magazine, Downbeat. Maltin at Cinecon 26, c. A History of American Animated Cartoons. Starting on May 29, , Maltin was the movie reviewer on the syndicated television series Entertainment Tonight for 30 years. He also spearheaded the creation of the Walt Disney Treasures collectible DVD line in , [5] and continues to provide creative input and host the various sets. He also appeared on Super Password as a celebrity guest in During the s and s Maltin served on the advisory board of the National Student Film Institute. In , Maltin settled a libel suit brought by former child star Billy Gray , of Father Knows Best fame, who Maltin identified in his review of the film Dusty and Sweets McGee as a real-life drug addict and dealer. With his daughter Jessie Maltin, he co-hosts Maltin on Movies, a long-form interview podcast for the Nerdist Industries network. He also wrote the introduction for The Complete Peanuts: Popular culture appearances[edit] Maltin was portrayed in an episode of the animated comedy South Park called " Mecha-Streisand " where he, along with actor Sidney Poitier and singer Robert Smith , fight Barbra Streisand , who has assumed the form of Mecha-Streisand, a giant, Godzilla -like robot version of herself. His own gigantic form was reminiscent of Ultraman with his initials on his chest. He also appeared as himself in Gremlins 2: The New Batch , playing a film critic who blasts the first Gremlins movie, only to get attacked by Gremlins. This was spoofed in the Mad magazine parody of Gremlins 2, where he protests being eaten as Roger Ebert gave a worse review of the film, only for the Gremlins to remark they are waiting until Thanksgiving to find Ebert, as "he will feed a family of 15! Maltin also made an appearance on the cartoon show Freakazoid! Maltin starred on an episode of Entertainment Tonight , where he was presenting a time machine akin to one in the film The Time Machine. He sits in the machine and then vanishes, as does the character in the film. Maltin is one of the few people to appear as a "guest star" on Mystery Science Theater ; during a Season Nine episode, he joins Pearl Forrester in torturing Mike Nelson with the film Gorgo. He was also mocked on the show for giving the film Laserblast a rating of 2. After Mike and the Bots finish watching the movie, they express amazement at the rating while Mike reads off a list of well-known films that Maltin gave similar ratings to. The review begins with a silent Maltin swaying to a recording of the Glenn Miller Orchestra playing "Pennsylvania ", wherein the instrumental melody is interrupted by the sound of a telephone ringing part of the original recording , after which the band chants the title of the song. In his review, Maltin timed it so that his review began with the phone ringing: Maltin appeared on the podcast in February and played the game himself. He appeared on the show again in August Beginning in November , Maltin has hosted the podcast Maltin on Movies. The two picked a topic generally based on what was currently in theaters and discussed three other movies within that topic: Topics included biopics, breakthrough performances, and sequels.
