Pastry chefs and baking enthusiasts alike craft cookies inspired by numerous world cultures with a plethora of ingredients. Additionally, natural food trends inspire consumers to seek home-baked treats such as cookies, especially when those treats are handmade with organic and natural ingredients. You can break into the home-baked goods business for a little cash and start selling cookies as soon as your first batches come out of the oven. Use your tax ID to keep personal and baking business purchases separate, which could prove useful when preparing your tax return. You can also use your tax ID to open business credit accounts to purchase baking equipment if needed. Consult your state and local government websites to find which additional licenses and permits you need to operate your home-baked cookie business. Licenses and permits vary by state. To manufacture food for public consumption, public health departments nationwide require bakeries, whether home-based or in a commercial facility, to pass safety and sanitation inspections. Your health department can provide you with a list of items that must be in order before the health inspector arrives. Bake your best cookie recipes and place a platter with samples prominently in the middle of your table or booth. You can have a member of your staff walk around the market offering samples to other vendors and market attendees, market rules permitting. Farmers market organizers require vendors to fill out an application and provide proof of health department inspection to sell products to the public. Contact local businesses that sell cookies and related items. Some businesses openly seek locally produced items for maximum freshness. Such businesses could include, but are not limited to, restaurants, catering and event-planning businesses, coffee shops and supermarkets. Visit the websites of such businesses and look for links that read "sell to us" or "vendor information. Take a tray of samples, brochures and order forms to accommodate on-the-spot orders. Iowa State University says that some vendors may require you to have business liability insurance, which you can purchase from the company that insures your vehicle or home. Rent a food cart or food truck to sell home-baked cookies at various locations in your area. You must apply for a permit and submit to a health department inspection to operate legally in your jurisdiction. Upon receipt of your permit, use social networking forums to get the word out about your business. Announce daily cookie specials and where interested customers can find you throughout the day. Tip If you operate a food cart or truck, sell beverages as a potential tactic to increase revenue.
