Chapter 6 : World's Largest Banks

The 10 biggest banks in the world Despite big scandals and backlash from last decade's financial crisis, the banks that are an intricate part of our global economy have survived and, in many.

The Industrial and Commercial Bank of China is the largest bank in the world. Assets play a significant role in determining the size of the bank. Assets also show the worth of a bank and include both liquid wealth and property owned by the bank that can be converted to cash. Share High-net-worth individuals, by nature, tend to have more complex financial goals than the average consumer. With private banking, they receive help in a range of areas – from traditional banking needs to investment and trust services – under a single roof. Clients also benefit from having a dedicated private banker who coordinates all these services and simplifies the communication process. Today, many banks around the world – both large and small – offer income-dependent banking services to customers who meet their income requirements. However, the sector is still dominated by institutions in Europe and the United States. Here are the 10 biggest private banking providers, according to the market research firm Scorpio Partnership. The Private Banking Top 10 List

The Bottom Line Demand among affluent customers for highly personalized banking services has been a boon to private banking over the past couple years. Banks headquartered in the U.S. If private banking seems the right choice for your needs, research prospective banks carefully, including the fees involved. Then decide whether the services are worth what you will pay for them compared to what your current bank and broker or financial advisor charge. Cost is just one element to consider when deciding what makes the most sense for you.

Chapter 8 : List of All Banks in U.S.

LONDON - Every year S&P Global Market Intelligence releases its annual ranking of the world's biggest banks by assets, and in , for another year, Chinese banks dominate the top of the list.

In the s, the top 10 were mainly Japanese; in the s, American; and today, Chinese. This year is particularly interesting as there is a clear impact of Brexit on the British banks. UK banks made less than half the profits compared to French banks and the gap is likely to widen with a Macron business boost expected across the Channel. Uncertainty following the EU referendum, coupled with a drop in the value of sterling, sent domestic-focused banks tumbling in the ranking. The Royal Bank of Scotland fell from 19th to 30th and Lloyds fell from 24th to 35th in the ranking, which uses Tier 1 capital as its key measure. HSBC previously topped the ranking in . Two challenger banks also entered the ranking for the first time: Aldermore at and OneSavings at . Shawbrook returned to the ranking at . While the performance of UK banks is less than stellar, they are doing better than some other European countries. Chinese banks still dominate the ranking although the top five Chinese banks saw their profits fall as the economy slowed down. And further details from the July issue below: Emerging market lenders have proven resilient to the commodity crunch and their national crises, but their European rivals are struggling, and there is more than interest rates to blame. The latest Top results suggest the Basel Committee has much to be pleased about. It is the third biggest increase in a decade, topped only by the and rankings, when banks were scrambling to satisfy new capital requirements under the first phase of Basel III. Even more impressive is that this occurred despite currency depreciation. However, as most banks report in their local currency, their figures can be materially affected by foreign exchange moves. Many banks detest the leverage ratio as a blunt tool that does not distinguish between super-safe assets, such as AAA rated government bonds, and high-yield notes. Yet based on the global aggregate capital-to-assets ratio hitting 6. All this may please policy-makers, but for the industry their problems have simply moved on from a lack of safety and soundness, to a lack of profitability. Global pre-tax profits slid once again in , this time by 1. Its return on equity ROE and return on capital ROC are second to Latin America, but excluding crisis-ridden Venezuela where results are distorted by triple-digit inflation and a drastically overvalued official exchange rate , Africa sweeps the board for profitability indicators. With the US Federal Reserve on course to lift interest rates to 1. Other regions, however, are battling significant macro-economic headwinds, and with varying success. Credit rating agencies responded by downgrading sovereigns and banks across the region, while oil-dependent governments slashed spending, funding costs increased and more borrowers became at risk of default. Analysts predicted turmoil for banks in the Gulf states, warning about lower profitability, higher non-performing loans NPLs and impairment charges, a liquidity crunch and resultant industry consolidation. Regional aggregate profits slid 4. Regional ROA is flat at 1. By almost every measure, the Middle East was more profitable in than four years prior. Kuwait and Bahrain have also increased returns in the years since crude prices started to slide. Other signs of a sector in distress have not materialised either. The deal was motivated by their complementary strengths in retail and investment banking, not to shore up struggling balance sheets. Many CEOs pointed to low interest margins “the difference between interest charged to borrowers and paid to depositors” which they blame on the European Central Bank ECB and Bank of England cutting rates to historic lows in . But profitability differs greatly from country to country, suggesting other factors are at play. Portugal has experienced a similar situation. Collectively their losses shrunk . Nord LB and Deutsche Bank. For beleaguered national champion Deutsche Bank, may seem a year to forget, thanks to a painful restructure, speculation it would miss coupon payments on contingent convertible bonds, and a US stress-test failure. But Deutsche has maintained its number 21 global ranking and its capital adequacy ratio is higher than most banks in the top . It looks set to build on this feat next year, as its clean-up and restructure has continued into . One name our rankings will not be seeing again is second biggest loss-maker Banco Popular. The only change to the leaderboard sees Bank of America move from fifth to sixth at the expense of Agricultural Bank of China. Nonetheless, the US continued its unassailable post-crisis recovery, posting solid but sustainable growth in total assets, capital and profits. Mid-cap names made the strongest gains, the largest being KeyCorp and Huntington Bancshares. Once again, the US has more banks in the Top than any other country; of its 10 new arrivals, the standout is Citizens Bank, debuting at number 99 after being sold by RBS in . The headline change in China, as in the US, is that growth is now fuelled by second-tier banks. Since hitting a high of , This suggests the leading banks are reaching their size limit, while a number of second-tier lenders “ and even more outside the global top 50 “ continue to post double-digit growth. In January , it took the historic decision to move into negative territory, dropping rates to . Net interest income at its biggest four lenders dropped 6. There are signs of encouragement though. Yet marked a reversal of fortunes for the two laggard countries, helping their banks to stage a comeback. Profits at the 11 Brazilian banks in the rankings surged . These figures have been boosted by foreign exchange fluctuations. The real and rouble were the best performing emerging market currencies of , gaining . This is supported by their profitability ratios, which are not impacted by currency fluctuation. Their rebound is not limited to profits. Its biggest lender, Sberbank, has soared 15 spots to place 36th in the global rankings. From to , the regulator withdrew more than banking licences from institutions that were chronically weak or unscrupulously led. While Brazil and Russia have been bolstered by their recovering currencies, the UK has experienced the opposite effect. It comes as no surprise, therefore, that British bank rankings are the most affected by foreign exchange swings. Mid-size banks and building societies were also hit. As they report in US dollars, and because such a large portion of their revenues is booked outside the UK, their results have not been impacted in the manner of their national peers. It is also why the country has posted the fifth biggest drop in total assets. Angola, Nigeria and Mexico can cite the same reason for appearing on the list of biggest asset declines. Currency depreciation may also be why Egyptian and Nigerian names have experienced some of the biggest declines in deposit funding. However, in this case, it has had a tangible impact on their business. Their central banks relaxed or scrapped their pegs against the dollar in , causing the Egyptian pound and naira to plummet. Depositors would be forgiven for withdrawing their cash to convert into more stable currencies, rather than simply losing value sitting in the bank. He denies any wrongdoing. While other Chinese banks have aggressively expanded overseas in recent years, they have done so via branches and so are notably absent from the FOS rankings Banco Santander comfortably retains second place in the list of most profitable foreign networks. This is largely thanks to its Brazilian business which, after dropping out the top 25 FOS list last year, has staged an impressive comeback to rank third. Profits at its Americas business doubled in and the Japanese parent is investing heavily in its European operations. A network likely to disappear is Nordea, which recently converted many of its subsidiaries into branches, including its top-performing Finnish business. But while higher ICPs are putting short-term pressure on returns, they are part of the necessary process of addressing NPLs. European and Japanese banks continue to have the lowest RWA densities, partly caused by their retreat from capital-intensive businesses to boost profitability. However, banks from these regions favour internal models to measure risk, a practice the Basel Committee is considering curbing. It suggests they may, by and large, have finished their major de-risking exercises. Big European and US banks continue to set the benchmark for cutting headcount, as rising regulatory costs force them to improve efficiencies to boost profits. Citigroup recently announced that its multi-year restructure is over, so its downsizing may be drawing to an end. UniCredit, on the other hand, is upping the ante. After steadily shrinking headcount since , last year it axed . Somewhat surprisingly, European-headquartered banks set the pace for hiring. The th-ranked Dutch bank sells small short-term loans for household items to customers with little or no credit history. Two years ago they claimed eight of the top 10 spots for rising headcount, but this year there are only three names. Postal Savings Bank of China is an interesting exception. It became a public company in September , so may face more pressure to improve efficiencies and accountability, and therefore downsize more swiftly going forward. It is striking that the biggest increases in employee numbers are significantly lower than a few years ago, suggesting the biggest banks are not only reaching their natural limit in terms of capital and assets, but also of their workforce.
