Romanticism As a style and approach to art, romanticism uses literary, historically remote and exotic subject matter and treats it in an emotional and dramatic manner. Very suitable for European folk and fairy tale. Magic Realism The art form is basically realistic, but with a slight intrusion of something unreal – a magical element or overtone [scale or perspective or something fantastic] that can create a supernatural atmosphere. Its images can be drawn from dreams and the unconscious, with symbolic allusion and luminous or psychedelic colouration. Stylists A handful of illustrators may be categorized primarily as stylists because they use a specific medium for the transmission of idea and story. Virtually everyone who reads it interprets the story in a different way. The same is true of the different artists who have illustrated the story over the years. By looking at the way five different artists have illustrated one scene, we can see the no one style illustration is correct. We all react to these pictures in different ways. Note how the different artists have used the visual elements of colour, line, shape, and texture and the design elements of composition and dominance to create highly individual interpretations of the same scene. The following illustrations have been grouped together according to illustration style. Consider how the artists have used the various elements described to create their pictures. Ida and the Wool Smugglers. This story is set on an island off the BC coast during the last century. But, she manages to outwit two sheep smugglers, save an ewe and her twins, and hold her own sheep run. And, yes, she does get to hold the baby at the end of the story. Her lack of perspective is typical of the style of native art. That farm is the setting for this book. When he was 16, William was sent to school in Winnipeg. He was eager to tell of his adventures on the farm, but no one would listen. Contrary to the happy, idyllic nature of this book, William apparently had a miserable childhood. Notice how Kruehler uses space as a major element in these illustrations. Many of us are familiar with this classic Canadian story about hockey. It first appeared as an animated film and won numerous awards. Our hero is crushed, and ends up in church where he prays for moths to come and eat his Toronto Maple Leafs sweater! This is a very complex story with references to a variety of different cultures. The two main characters are Zorah and her husband Akhmed, Berbers who live near the city of Fez in Morocco. In the story, Zorah weaves a magic carpet and uses it to visit far away lands. Zorah visits the Ukraine, near the outskirts of Kiev, where she meets a family who are holding a wedding and gives the bride a gift – the slippers from her feet. In turn, the bride gives Zorah her vinok, the traditional wedding head dress. Zorah travels to India too, where she gives a young woman her silver necklace and in turn is given a peacock. The Wise Washerman ill. This retelling of a traditional Burmese tale shows that jealousy can be a very destructive emotion. Of course, his scheme backfires and it is Narathu that ends up being banished at the end of the tale Wang Kui, a Chinese Canadian drew upon his heritage when creating these luminous illustrations which evoke the magic of the far-away land of Burma. Kids Can Press, In each of the Franklin books, Franklin is faced with a dilemma of sorts. He manages to solve it, usually with some loving help from his parents. In this particular story, the problem has become about because Franklin told a lie Franklin uses some delaying tactics, but finally he discusses his problem with his parents There is a nice touch at the end of the book: Note how Clark uses colour and shape to create a mood in her illustrations. Mortimer Mooner stopped taking a bath. Bungalow Books, started by Frank B. Edwards and John Bianchi, has been a major hit in the last few years. Their picture books, featuring cartoon style animals, are very appealing for young children. In this story Mortimer Mooner decides to stop taking baths. This behaviour continues until his grandmother comes to visit and she is forced to fend him off with an umbrella. Mortimer decides to take a bath. In Show and tell, Benjamin wanted to take something really neat to school for show and tell, so he decides to take his baby sister. Well, you can imagine the chaos that ensues. monkey man. Martchenko has also illustrated the Midnight Matthew series, written by Allen Morgan. These are contemporary urban stories. Since the Matthew stories all take place after he has gone to bed, he appears in his pyjamas, but notice other items of clothing he wears. And each story ends with the question: By Kim La Favre. And Amos was cold. And Amos was tired of giving away all his wool. Meet Amos, see him without his wool, complete with band aids because Aunt Hattie has taken his wool to knit into a sweater for Uncle Harry. But Amos hates that sweater and uses every opportunity to snatch at it, making big holes in it. Guess what Amos ends up wearing? By Kady MacDonald Denton. Again, we see a gentler, more romantic style of cartooning. In this story, Jackie lives on a farm and has many animals to play with, but he is lonesome. His mother buys him a duck and he names it Little Quack. She plays with him and becomes his best friend. One day Little Quack runs away and the family finds her at another farm. Jackie continues to play with her, but she runs away again. Over a month later he finds her with ten ducklings and tries to get them home again so that neither Jackie nor Little Quack will ever be lonely again. Can you catch Josephine? Poulin is a French Canadian writer and illustrator. It continues the adventure of Daniel and his cat. We follow Daniel as he chases Josephine around his school. Children identify with Daniel, but also, on another level, they identify with the cat. We now move into a more grotesque, almost surrealistic style of cartooning. In Rainy day magic, two children are forced to play inside on a rainy day. The children move to the basement, but did the adventure really happen? Muller uses his illustrations to create a romantic, Gothic atmosphere in this book. Note his use of perspective: This is a very romantic story about a young man named Robin. An orphan, Robin meets up with an evil sorcerer who owns a white dove. The dove turns out to be Of course, this story has the traditional happy ending. Dial Books for Young Readers, He has worked a variety of jobs, including being a set designer at CBC. In this book, his illustrations do not extend the story in the usual way, rather they stand apart from the text. They are more like windows into a special fairyland where the figures appear frozen. There is a very stately feel to his pictures and the details, such as the costuming, are usually authentic. In Pome and Peel, he illustrates a traditional folk tale from Italy. North Winds Press, Is it romanticism or magic realism? This book clearly blurs the edges between these two categories. These are gifts with a difference, for example, the calling birds are loons and the lords a leaping moose! The book ends with the wedding of the two black bears. Magic Realism Wynne-Jones, Tim. Zoom away is the first of three books about the magical cat, Zoom, and his adventures. Did you ever see a cat knitting? All the illustrations are black and white and the figures not exaggerated.
