For my mother For rural India For the non-English types Acknowledgements and some thoughts Thank you, dear reader and friend, for picking up Half Girlfriend. Whatever I have achieved today in life is thanks to you. Shinie Antony, my editor and first reader since Five Point Someone. Her feedback is invaluable. My teamâ€™Bhakti, Michelle, Tanya and Virali. My immediate familyâ€™Anusha, Shyam, Ishaan. My brother and his wife, Ketan and Pia. My in-laws, Suri, Kalpana, Anand and Poonam. Friends who make life worthwhile. My extended family on Twitter and Facebook. The entire team at Rupa Publications India. All those I met in Bihar while writing this book. And, finally, Bill Gatesâ€™and not just for Microsoft Word this time. I want to share something with you. With this book, I complete ten years as a writer. When I started writing, my motives were different. I wanted to make it. I wanted to prove a point. Today, I write for different reasons. I write for change. A change in the mindset of Indian society. However, it helps to have positive intentions and a direction in life, and I am glad to have found mine. I want to reach as many people as I canâ€™through books, films or other mediums of entertainment, I am human; I will falter and I will have ups and downs. Admiration passes, love endures. Also, admiration comes with expectations, Love accepts some flaws, In fact, people sometimes ask me how I would like to be remembered. While hopefully that is a while away, all I tell them this: Welcome to Half Girlfriend. He shook his head. I checked my watch. I gave you my view. We were in my room at the Chanakya Hotel, Patna. This morning, he had tried to stop me on my way out. Then he had waited for me all day; I had returned late at night to find him sitting in the hotel lobby. And now here we were in my room as he pulled out three tattered notebooks from his backpack. The spines of the notebooks came apart as he plonked them on the table. The yellowing pages fanned out between us. The pages had handwritten text, mostly illegible as the ink had smudged. Many pages had holes, rats having snacked on them. An aspiring writer, I thought. This is not a book. I looked up at him. Even seated, he was tall. Over six feet in height, he had a sunburnt, outdoor ruggedness about him. Black hair, black eyes and a particularly intense gaze. He wore a shirt two sizes too big for his lean frame. He had large hands. He reassembled the notebooks, gentle with his fingers, almost caressing the pages. He shook Iris head. A bowl of fruit and some chocolates sat next to my bed. He took a piece of, dark chocolate when I offered it. You cannot pick up a chocolate when someone has just mentioned a death. I took a few deep breaths and wondered what to say next. Her ex-landlord found them after years. Can I order some food first? I live in Dumraon, eighty kilometres from here. Not typical of someone who runs a school in the back of beyond. I saw him swallow to keep his composure. Actually, I went to St. The waiter shifted the journals to put the sandwich tray on the table. A few sheets fell to the floor. The waiter apologized and scooted out of the room. I offered Madhav the club sandwich, which had a tomato, cheese and lettuce filling. He ignored me and rearranged the loose sheets of paper. But why have you brought them here? Maybe they will be useful to you. A part of me wanted him out of my room as soon as possible. Sorry to have disturbed you. He scribbled his phone number on a piece of paper and kept it on the table. Please take them with you. It took me a few Seconds to realize what had happened. I picked up the journals and ran out of the room, but the sole working lift had just gone down. I came back to my room, irritated by his audacity. I switched off the lights and lay down. I had to catch an early-morning flight to Mumbai the next day and had a four-hour window of sleep. What the hell is a half-girlfriend? Eyes wide open, I lay in bed, staring at the little flashing red light from the smoke detector on the ceiling, The journals bothered me. Sure, they lay in the dustbin. However, something about those torn pages, the dead person and her half-boyfriend, or whoever he was, intrigued me. Read just one page. But thirty minutes later, I switched on the lights in my room, fished out the journals from the dustbin and opened the first volume. Most pages were too damaged to read. I tried to make sense of what I could. The first page dated back nine years to 1 November Riya had written about her fifteenth birthday. One mere page, I kept thinking. I flipped through the pages as I tried to find another readable one. Three hours later, I had read whatever could be read in the entire set. The room phone rang at 5 a. I called Jet Airways. We need to talk. The kettle is above the minibar. The early morning sun highlighted his sharp features. He handed me a cup of tea and took a seat diagonally opposite me on the double bed. Tell me the story of Madhav and Riya. When we first met? Lost, I stopped whoever I could in the confusing corridors of St. Stephens College to ask for directions.

As Riya asks Madhav to speak in English, the story is retold in flashback when Madhav was asked by professors at St. Madhav is a rustic, rural young man who cannot speak English well. He gets acceptance into University based on a sports quota. At campus, he meets Riya Somani, an upper class young woman who is allowed temporary admission also based on a sports quota. Madhav helps Riya to train and win her trial, securing her place at the University. They become good friends and play basketball every evening in the college court. When Madhav tells his roommate Shailesh Vikrant Massey and friends about Riya, they push him to ask Riya out for a date. Next day, Madhav asks Riya out and they both go for a movie. In the theater, Madhav tries to get close to Riya but she stops him and asks him to just be a friend. Later that day, Madhav discusses the incident with his friends, who still encourage him to pursue Riya in the hopes that she will eventually date him. Uncomfortable, Riya says that she is not his girlfriend, but they can maybe reach a compromise, and she offers to be his " Half Girlfriend ". Excited, Madhav, tells his friends about this latest development. However, they mock him and insist that she is just using him. They tell Madhav that he should ask Riya to sleep with him. Confused, Madhav decides to follow his friends advice, and asks Riya to visit him in his dorm room. He tries to get intimate with her and they end up having a heated argument in which Madhav accidentally pushes Riya. Riya keeps her distance and the pair do not meet for a long time. One day, Madhav receives an invitation to the wedding of Riya from her childhood friend, Rohan Chandak. Broken hearted, Madhav graduates and returns to his hometown without sitting in for placements. Some years later, while helping his mother in the school she runs, Madhav realizes that the school does not admit girls due to the lack of toilet facilities. The local government is unable to help financially, so they decide to approach Bill Gates , who is visiting India. While visiting the Chanakya Hotel, to meet with the UN delegation, Madhav meets Riya who is there for a job interview. Madhav recalls that she wanted to become a bar singer in New York. Unprepared, Madhav goes to New York to visit his friend Shailesh. There, he begins his search for Riya, to no avail. Shailesh asks Madhav about Riya, and he recalls the incident when he met her at Chanakya Hotel. Madhav tells Riya that he has to prepare a speech to present before Bill Gates , and Riya agrees to help him. Madhav is successful and Bill Gates awards a large cash donation to the school. After the celebrations end, Riya leaves suddenly and leaves a letter behind. In the letter, she confesses that she loves him, but is unable to tell him because she is afraid of love. Her father beat her mother and she believes that every relationship ultimately leads to pain and unhappiness. She writes that when they first met, the time was not enough for them, and now Riya has no time remaining because she has a terminal illness and will die within three months. In the present, Madhav tries to find Riya for three months unsuccessfully, and his time runs out. Shailesh tries to distract Madhav by introducing him to Anshika Rhea Chakraborty , however he is not interested in her. While sitting at the bar, he overhears a song which sounds familiar to one which Riya used to sing. He then finds out the singer is indeed Riya. A flash forward to the future shows Madhav has decided to build another school in a neighbouring village. The couple are now married with a daughter. Shraddha Kapoor as Riya Somani, a rich girl from Delhi who comes from an entrepreneur background. A singer, she loves to enjoy her own company and sings at a bar in New York.
