At last estimate, the largest non-Palauan ethnic groups included Filipinos 9. The members of the state legislatures are popularly elected for a four-year term, although in a few states, the term of office is limited to two years. The states are empowered to make their own laws, which must not be in conflict with the national constitution or any existing laws. Palau has no armed forces and does not have US armed forces within its borders except for a small contingent of US Navy Seabees who undertake civil action projects. Most households outside Koror are fully or partially engaged in subsistence agriculture. Staple subsistence crops include taros, cassavas, sweet potatoes, bananas, and papayas. Commercial produce is marketed mainly in Koror, consisting mostly of copra and coconut oil, vegetables, and a wide variety of tropical fruits. Pigs and chickens are raised by most households. Several small commercial egg-producing operations supply eggs to the Koror market. The Livestock Branch of the Division of Agriculture maintains breeding herds of pigs, cattle, and goats. A copra-processing plant is located in Malakal. Concrete blocks are manufactured, utilizing imported cement, and there is a small-scale sawmill industry. The center attracts visiting marine scientists; its giant clam hatchery was the first and remains the largest of its kind. Private-sector activities in tourism, restaurants and hotels, small workshops, banking, wholesale and retail outlets, transportation, and freight handling are located in Koror and, to a limited extent, the adjacent state of Airai. Most of the work force is employed in services related to tourism. The country relies heavily on imports for basic goods. The chronic trade deficit is largely offset by US grant assistance. Two are branches of foreign banks, the Bank of Hawaii and the Bank of Guam; the other, a local bank which started in , is the Bank of Palau. There is also a profits tax on financial institutions. There is also an import duty rebate offered by Palau as an investment incentive. The Belau National Museum, established in , is also located in Koror. King John , 3. The Tempest , 5. However, Shakespearean blank verse was used with some success by John Webster and Thomas Middleton in their plays. Ben Jonson , meanwhile, used a tighter blank verse with less enjambment in his great comedies Volpone and The Alchemist. Blank verse was not much used in the non-dramatic poetry of the 17th century until Paradise Lost , in which Milton used it with much license and tremendous skill. Milton used the flexibility of blank verse, its capacity to support syntactic complexity, to the utmost, in passages such as these: What though the field be lost? All is not lost; the unconquerable Will, And study of revenge, immortal hate, And courage never to submit or yield: In the century after Milton, there are few distinguished uses of either dramatic or non-dramatic blank verse; in keeping with the desire for regularity, most of the blank verse of this period is somewhat stiff. At the close of the 18th century, William Cowper ushered in a renewal of blank verse with his volume of kaleidoscopic meditations, The Task , published in After Shakespeare and Milton, Cowper was the main influence on the next major poets in blank verse, teenagers when Cowper published his masterpiece. Wordsworth used the form for many of the Lyrical Ballads and , and for his longest efforts, The Prelude and The Excursion. Five years have past; five summers, with the length Of five long winters! And again I hear These waters, rolling from their mountain-springs With a soft inland murmur. Well, they are gone, and here must I remain, This lime-tree bower my prison! I have lost Beauties and feelings, such as would have been Most sweet to my remembrance even when age had dimmed mine eyes to blindness! Of the Victorian writers in blank verse, the most prominent are Tennyson and Robert Browning. Below is an extract spoken by Princess Ida after singing her entrance aria "Oh, goddess wise". Women of Adamant, fair neophytesâ€” Who thirst for such instruction as we give, Attend, while I unfold a parable. The elephant is mightier than Man, Yet Man subdues him. In Mathematics, Woman leads the way: The narrow-minded pedant still believes That two and two make four! Why, we can prove, We womenâ€”household drudges as we areâ€” That two and two make fiveâ€”or threeâ€”or seven; Or five-and-twenty, if the case demands! Blank verse, of varying degrees of regularity, has been used quite frequently throughout the 20th century in original verse and in translations of narrative verse. A complete listing is impossible, since a sort of loose blank verse has become a staple of lyric poetry, but it would be safe to say that blank verse is as prominent now as it has been any time in the past three hundred years. Examine critically the title page of Frankenstein and its thematic relationship with the text. Frankenstein is a gothic novel by Mary Shelley that was first published in 1818. It is an epistolary novel in which a sailor, namely Richard Walton, sailing to the North Pole, is writing an account in a letter to his sister, of meeting Victor Frankenstein- a scientist of Natural Philosophy and Chemistry whose experiments led to the creation of a monster. Gothic was a genre of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century England. A rejoinder to the Realist novels, the gothic novels brought out the dark side of the human mind with emphasis on the fantastic flight of imagination. Frankenstein is a novel of transgression and fantasy in the realm of human nature and science, a product of which is the Monster in the novel. He was condemned by Zeus by which his liver was to be devoured upon by an eagle everyday while the liver re-grew itself in the night, to be eaten up again the next morning. It is interesting to note that Romantics- close contemporaries and appreciators of Gothic writings for their imagination- had a very sympathetic vision of Prometheus. The subtitle of Frankenstein, hint at the recurring theme of overreaching and destructive ambition in the novel. At the beginning, it is Richard Walton who seems to be the overreacher; he passionately desired to sail across the North Pole for whose success he had endangered the lives of all the crewmembers. Within a few pages, Walton is displaced by the companion of his loneliness whom he meets in the ice covered sea, Victor Frankenstein. He becomes lonely and embarks on a journey of vengeance. He is not the benefactor of humanity who used fire here, lightning for the purpose of human survival but to quench his own insatiable ambitions. On the success or rather failure of his enterprise, with the birth of an ugly and horrible creature, he abandons it and runs away in a fit of desperate anxiety. It is this abandonment that turns an innocent being with possibly civil capabilities to become violent and vengeful against the whole mankind. Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay To mould me man? Did I solicit thee From darkness to promote me? He gives up his responsibility towards the creature that he creates without a past and without an identity. Moreover, he abandons the abhorrent creature of ugly physiognomy to survive the hostile world on his own, teaching himself language, geography and the ways of the world. Throughout the novel, Victor and the creature constantly play roles of God and Adam, and God and Satan. I, like the arch fiend, bore a hell within me. Just before this, the former admits- Like Adam, I was created apparently untied by no link to any other being in existence. Many times I considered Satan as the fitter emblem of my condition; for often like him when I viewed the bliss of my protectors, the bitter gall of envy rose within me. The title of Frankenstein opens up various entry points to its narrative and its themes.

As a seventeenth-century author and poet, Milton had little reason to be concerned with the former Elizabethan regime. Pruitt, argues that Milton uses the themes of reciprocity, or the sharing of male and female gifts, and gender hierarchy to create an Eden where male and female are equal Pruitt He also contends that the quest for knowledge is a servile operation, one which requires the seeker to always work, never attaining the object desired Finally, he argues that the sovereign moment is that moment in which anticipation meets disappointment, that is to say, when the object of desire is accepted as one that may not be attained, although it remains conceived of as an object which possibly exists If we are to accept the conditions established by Batailleâ€”those which must be met in order for one to be deemed sovereignâ€”then we must also acknowledge that according to these conditions, Adam is sovereign while Eve is servile or subordinate. Whereas Adam labors for no other end than to glorify God, Eve remains concerned with productivity, through which she hopes she may prove herself to be as competent as her husband. Eve also remains desirous of knowledge, a pursuit that Bataille considers a servile operation, and for Eve, one that eventually leads to original sin. Finally, Eve never accepts her object of desireâ€”knowledgeâ€”as one that may be conceptualized but never obtained. For example, the rise in consumer activity in early modern Europe triggered a rise in female readership Lamb Throughout the seventeenth century, commodities of all kinds, especially books, became significant symbols of social status. However, early modern associations of female idleness with social superiority granted women an additional opportunity to validate this proof. By discussing the books she owned, a woman demonstrated that she spent much of her time in idleness, reading for leisure. Paralleling a rise in seventeenth-century female readership was a rise in politicized female authorship. For example, several women published defensive tracts in response to the gynophobic attacks of pamphleteer Joseph Swetnam Miller These women often alluded to the Biblical story of Adam and Eve, identifying with Eve and projecting the identity of the serpent onto the male pamphleteer. This analogy gendered seduction and deceit as masculine, reversing conventional attacks on women as the source of original sin. Without making any specific argument or recommendation, Milton does draw attention to this debate, and he does challenge the profeminist positions offered by female pamphleteers. The school of ecofeminist literary criticism combines environmental criticism and feminist literary criticism to explore the relationships among nature, gender, race, class, and sexuality in literature Legler The central tenet of ecofeminism is that masculine domination of women parallels the cultural domination of nature. The earliest revelation of this dichotomy occurs in Book IV, when Adam and Eve are preparing for sleep. Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet, With charm of earliest birds; pleasant the sun When first on this delightful land he spreads His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower. Let me explain in detail how this works. While describing to Raphael his first memories of Paradise, Adam recollects being overcome with admiration for the nature that surrounded him. From his observations, Adam concluded that a divine maker must have created him. She then apprehensively rose to her feet and walked to a grassy bank, where she sat and observed her reflection in a lake. Eve obeyed, and God brought her to Adam. Second, after opening their eyes, they gaze in opposite directions. Adam first gazes at the sky, whereas Eve peers down at the water. The sunny, amicable environment that welcomes Adam into Paradise, as opposed to the overcast, hostile environment that welcomes Eve, signals that Adam is the knowledgeable, or enlightened, half of the couple. This implication becomes more apparent as Adam initially turns his gaze to the heavens, which symbolizes his confidence and understanding. In Book V, Raphael discusses the hierarchy of human faculties with Adam, explaining that the lower faculties, those of the senses, sustain the pure faculty of reason. According to the archangel, God gave the earthly and ethereal elements a parallel hierarchical structure 5. He explains that the grosser elements, earth and sea, feed the air and that the air feeds the ethereal elements. Of the ethereal elements, he continues, the moon is the lowest, and it provides nourishment for the sun. Given that the hierarchy of elements and the hierarchy of human faculties are analogous, the gendering of the lower ethereal element as feminine and the higher element as masculine implies that the lower human faculties belong to Eve while the higher ones belong to Adam. With his work ethic and logic-mindedness, Adam demonstrates that he, not Eve, embodies what Raphael considers the high human faculties. In Book IX, Eve proposes that she and Adam work separately in order to prevent their affection for one another from interfering with their labor. Until this point, Eve has considered her work not only a praise offering to God, but also a God-given privilege. Succeeding events strongly suggest that Eve feigns her work ethic in book IX in the hopes that she will attain the level of autonomy observed in her husband. It is at this point that Eve begins to employ the present moment for the sake of the future, an act which Bataille would consider one of servility. Assuming that by gaining knowledge she will attain the equality she desires, Eve forfeits her agreement with God and eats the forbidden fruit. Robert Walton " Letter 2 I desire the company of a man who could sympathise with me; whose eyes would reply to mine. You may deem me romantic, my dear sister, but I bitterly feel the want of a friend. Life, although it may only be an accumulation of anguish, is dear to me, and I will defend it. I was benevolent; my soul glowed with love and humanity: I had saved a human being from destruction, and as a recompense, I now writhed under the miserable pain of a wound, which shattered the flesh and bone. The feelings of kindness and gentleness which I had entertained but a few moments before gave place to hellish rage and gnashing of teeth. Inflamed by pain, I vowed eternal hatred and vengeance to all mankind. Am I not shunned and hated by all mankind? More miserable than man ever was before, why did I not sink into forgetfulness and rest? His major contribution was towards a more rational society especially as applied to Political Justice. It is not surprising that the young Mary would include varied instances of injustice in her first novel. Abraham drew near, and said, "Will you consume the righteous with the wicked? What if there are fifty righteous within the city? Will you consume and not spare the place for the fifty righteous who are in it? What if ten are found there? He was a Turkish merchant, and had inhabited Paris for many years, He was tried and condemned to death. The injustice of his sentence was very flagrant; all Paris was indignant; and it was judged that his religion and wealth, rather than the crime alleged against him, had been the cause of his condemnation. It is the magistrate, Mr Kerwin who restores our faith in justice in Britain " not in France or Switzerland. But on you only had I any claim for pity and redress, and from you I determined to seek that justice which I vainly attempted to gain from any other being that wore the human form. No wonder the world is wracked with so much misery and dissention.
