Contact Author club fundraising ideas - school fundraising ideas Are you looking for a lucrative fundraising idea? I think my fundraisers ideas have worked because I know how to make things fun and interesting. These have included school fundraisers, charity fundraisers, and fundraisers for organizations. One the best fundraising ideas for clubs is to host a beauty pageant. Actually, pageants and similar contests can be excellent school fundraising ideas, too. Below are some great fundraising ideas for clubs and schools. Glitz pageants can make a lot of money. Good fundraising ideas for pageants Decide what you want to award your winners. If you can find a trophy shop within driving distance, it might be cheaper to pick up the trophies than it would be to pay shipping fees. The best fundraising ideas for hosting pageants is to generate a lot of interest. One way to do this is to give big crowns or big trophies. Today, the girls are more interested in big crowns than they are in trophies. Take a photo of the crown and include it in your flyers. Place an ad in your local newspapers, as well as in papers in surrounding towns and cities. If your state has an online pageant directory, you can often place pageant announcements there for free. Be sure to announce up front your guidelines. Will the pageant be natural, high glitz, or low glitz. Discuss the rules and guidelines with your judges, too, and insist that they follow the guidelines. Glitz pageants and other types of beauty pageants can be fun for all ages. Club fundraising ideas When I belonged to a local civic club, we hosted numerous events to raise money for our favorite charity. Some of our club fundraising ideas have included luaus, silent auctions, dances, raffles, and beauty pageants. Yes, beauty pageants can be great fundraising ideas! You could actually get by without having a stage, but you will need a table and chairs for the judges and the auditors. Your fundraising ideas can include natural pageants, glitz pageants, or semi-glitz pageants. Oftentimes, judges will judge charity pageants for free. Each section might be worth 10 points, so a perfect contestant would receive a score of 40 from each judge, or total points. Obviously, the contestant with the highest total score in each age division is the winner. Many people like the idea of supporting charity pageants. Also, for charity pageants, you can award a special crown or trophy for the contestant who raises the most money for the charity. This crown or trophy should be really big and impressive! My oldest granddaughter loves beauty pageants, and glitz pageants are her favorite. The weekend after prom, however, might be a great time to host a pageant since many of the teen girls will be able to use their prom dresses as pageant dresses. After all, members of the audience have to pay to watch the pageant. Beauty pageants can be great school fundraising ideas. Pageants as school fundraisers The best fundraising ideas for school fundraisers are often those that take place at the school itself. As with clubs, hosting a pageant is a great fundraiser idea for schools, especially middle schools and high schools. For unique fundraising ideas, you might want to hold a mother-daughter pageant, a mother-son pageant, or an all-male beauty review, in which the male contestants dress as women. These are always a lot of fun! Beauty pageants can be categorized as glitz pageants, low glitz pageants, or natural pageants. Depending on the theme of your pageant, party supplies like streamers, balloons, and cardboard cutouts might be used on stage. As a backdrop, you can use party supplies like metallic wall curtains or fringe. Large live and artificial plants like palms and ferns also look nice on stage, as do fake columns. Check out party supplies stores in your area to get some more items to enhance your fundraising ideas. Remember, good fundraising ideas include events that are well run, attractive, and fun!

Get this from a library! Putting on perfect proms, programs & pageants. [Sallie G Randolph] -- Describes how to plan a prom, program, or pageant including budgets, committees and meetings, refreshments, decorations, and publicity.

There are glitz pageants, natural pageants, semi-glitz pageants, face pageants, online pageants, online photo contests, scholarship pageants, and coed pageants. Each type of pageant has its own rules and guidelines. And then there are the unwritten rules that you must know in order to be successful. This can be really mind-boggling for those new to beauty pageants! It can sometimes be a little confusing even for experienced contestants. Below is a description of each major type of pageant, along with a few suggestions for each. Remember, though, that this is just a general guideline. All beauty pageants are unique, and each one might have its own set of unique rules. Glitz, glitzy, or full glitz pageants These are the "everything goes" pageants. Contestants - even young ones - wear hair pieces, wigs or wiglets, full makeup, and flippers. Flippers are fake teeth that make the contestant appear to have perfect, dazzling white teeth. These contestants don pageant dresses that are super expensive and embellished with hundreds of Swarovski stones. The contestants in the older categories wear dresses that do not have so many stones. Almost all the girls in the pageant will have a perfect spray tan. The dresses in a glitz pageant make up a large percentage of the total score, as do stage presence, personality, and poise. The way the girl walks and acts on stage is important. Please note that all these embellishments are not required, and once in a great while, a non-glitz girl can win a glitz pageant, but these are rare instances. These are at the other end of the spectrum from the full glitz pageants. In a natural pageant, the girls usually wear simple flowe girl dresses or Sunday school dresses instead of elaborate pageant dresses. Some even require the girls to wear jeans and a tee shirt. Makeup is usually not allowed on girls under 6, and even older contestants shoud wear minimal makeup. Hair pieces, wigs, wiglets, and flippers are generally not allowed. Natural pageants are more concerned with natural beauty, and some score personality, poise, and stage presence. The outfit will not be judged. These pageants are basically just a toned-down version of a glitz pageant. Personailty is sometimes judged, too. Generally speaking, the contestant is usually called in front of the judges and asked a few simple questions. The stage walk is not usually judged. Model scouting agencies often have scouts at natural pageants, and contracts are sometimes offered to contestants. These can be glitz, semi-glitz, or natural. With most scholarship pageants, the older contestants must have a platform - a cause they believe in. They must go through an interview and sometimes have to give an onstage speech. They are also usually asked a question on stage. Thes pageants are for both males and females. Girls and young ladies of all ages may usually enter, but only little boys under 6 are usually allowed Online pageants and online photo contests. These are fun ways to dabble your feet into the pageant world. Fees are usually small compared with traditional pageants. Most online pageants and photo contests have categories for glitz photos and for natural photos, along with categories for boys and girls and for different age groups. More pageant tips are offered below.

Cowling Times have changed and the modern-day proms have little resemblance to the ones we had in our high school days. Most proms today are held in fancy hotels where teens arrive in lavish limousines. Teens are decked out in fancy clothes, some even spending as much as they would to get outfitted for a wedding. Needless to say, the price tag for this extravagant evening can cause havoc with parents and teens and threaten to bankrupt a household budget. Here are some tips to share with your teen: Assure your teen that having a date is not a big issue and that they should consider going in a group if they would like to attend their prom. Tickets, meals and transportation can be shared. This should be discussed prior to the event so kids can save up money. Plan Ahead – Help your teen make your arrangements for limos, restaurants, tux rental and flowers early. Kids will be disappointed when reservations are taken, so planning ahead can help avoid later disappointment. Some vendors offer discounts to teens who book early. We can advise our kids, tell them what we would do. Flowers – Remind your teen that if her date comes with a corsage she should wear it! All are pretty and smell terrific. The florist can help teens stay within their budget. For girls, a boutonniere is still a nice gesture to give their date. A simple rosebud will do just fine. Formal or Semi-formal – Formal usually means long gowns and tuxedos. Semi-formal can be short dresses and suits or dinner jackets. Pictures – Offer to take pictures of your child and date. Remember this can be awkward for your child so remember to discuss it before hand. Most likely he will agree, so take some of each child alone and then the couple. If they protest, remind them that they will love the pictures later and they will be less expensive than the professional photographers at the prom. Curfew – Set a time when you expect your teen to arrive home. Remind your child to let you know that he has arrived home safely and to call if there is any delay. As parents, we will try all three at some time or another, often in combination. But what works best in the long run is the method of helping kids arrive at their own right decisions. If we force our kids to do things our way, they learn something about us. If we allow them the time and the space to make up their own minds, they learn something about themselves. Undoubtedly, the years ahead will not be easy. The goal, I think, is like that rock, to stay firm while growing smoother as a result of difficulties, disappointments and dilemmas that wash over us all. Talk with other parents about safety. They are probably as cautious as you are. Teens like to stay out all night. The young people can change into sweats, dance, and watch videos until morning. Serve a fancy breakfast in the morning. More than 40 percent of deaths of sixteen- to twenty-year olds result from motor vehicle accidents. Almost 40 percent of these crashes were alcohol-related, according to Mothers Against Drunk Driving. Warn your teen about drinking and using drugs. If you choose to hold an after-prom party, be vigilant. Make sure no one brings alcohol or drugs into your home. The date rape drug Rohypnol can leave a young woman helpless to resist rape and unable to recall the assault later. Arrange transportation – Limousines are expensive, but a safe means of transportation. If this is out of your budget, make sure there is a designated driver for the evening. Be available – Make sure your teen knows where to reach you throughout the evening. If you plan to be out, carry a cell phone on you at all times. Talking can lead to interesting discussions and discoveries. Your teen is growing up – enjoy this quality time together.

Putting on Perfect Proms, Programs & Pageants by Sallie G. Randolph Much Ado about Prom Night by William D. McCants (fiction).

It is also about making nostalgic memories with friends, and there is no better way to do it than at prom. But are prom dresses supposed to be long or short? Should you put on something long or short? Every girl struggles with this question at some point and usually welcomes some guidance.

Long Dresses The traditional prom dress is long and flowing, and there is absolutely nothing wrong with that. There are thousands of good long dresses out there to suit every style and body type, some of the common types being mermaid and ball gown, wherein the latter is ideal for accentuating hips and waist and former is perfect for a girl who wishes to hide her extra pounds. Additionally because long dresses have good a reputation at formal events, it will be great if you wore one to a prom that is being held at fancy venue. They are also more feminine and elegant and do not appear casual or cheap even if they are. Generally long dresses are a safe choice for prom. However because of their length they make short girls look sluggish and non-charming. If a wearer is not tall enough, it will outshine her.

Short Dresses That said, sometimes length might be a problem ,especially when the venue of the prom is a gym or a college ground wherein you will typically be at a risk of tripping over your precious gown and in the worst case scenario, causing it to tear. Hey, you do not have to go through all these; it is okay to wear a short dress to prom! Sometime back it was awkward for a lady to wear a short dress to prom but today it is perfectly okay as long as you are comfortable in it and it is in line with the dress code of the event. In addition to freedom to move and dance short dresses will also make you look taller. They reveal more and that combined with some elegant high heels, they can make you look like you grew some inches overnight. So if you would like to accrue some of these advantages at the event, put on that short dress you fancy, there is absolutely nothing wrong with it!

Bottom line Every lady who attends prom deserves a nice and beautiful dress. It does not matter whether it is frilly or clingy or short or long, what is important is that it should be memorable for both the lady that is wearing it and those who see her in it. At some point prom dresses were mainly associated with floor length dresses. But fashions and times have changed and it has become more popular for ladies to wear short dresses to prom. Today both short and long dresses are usually heavily represented at Prom. Nonetheless, it is important to keep the venue in mind too. If the prom will be held at a less formal place like a school gym, then consider a short dress which tends to be less formal. Additionally, be aware of school dress codes! Some schools do not allow people to come in wearing very short dresses. Ultimately, it is all about you. So regardless of the length that you choose, just make sure that the outfit reflects your style and taste and makes you feel great all night long.

Chapter 5 : IT'S PROM SEASON: TIPS TO HELP AND SHARE

Putting on Perfect Proms, Programs, and Pageants (Non-Fiction Series) Sallie G. Randolph. from: $

Prom will be made memorable by the people you spend it with. Regardless of what clique you hung out with in high school, prom night is for everyone. You just have to surround yourselves with your tribe. Finding Your Prom Tribe Your tribe includes those nearest and dearest to you. The people you have spent the last four years laughing with and crying with. Those who you call your closest friends. Sometimes teens focus so much on finding the perfect date to bring to prom. They forget the most important people around them – their BFFs. Making sure you include them is essential. You may have a boyfriend. You are living the typical prom dream. But if you find yourself without a date as prom looms closer, do not stress out! Prom is the night that you will make so many fun memories with those around you. Make sure you surround yourself with your absolute favorite people. You will ensure you have the best prom night ever. You can surround yourself with all your girls, or get a co-ed group of friends together! Plan a fun family-style meal, spring for a limo bus with loud music to get amped for the night to come, and ring in your senior prom in style. No date, no problem! Alternative Prom A new trend with modern high school teens is taking effect – alternative prom. Anti-prom has become a safe haven for those who attend schools where kids are not as inclusive and friendly. It has been created for self-professed outsiders. Those who have no desire to pay so much money to attend the school dance. Alternative anti-proms can be a viable option. Alternative proms have gained so much momentum as they have grown into larger events. They had humble beginnings. They instead planned a fun fancy night with their best friends at their home! This movement has since burgeoned into a larger affair. We think that finding your own prom tribe is the best way to ensure you feel comfortable and included on prom night. Get ready show off that prom dress! It may seem a little expected. However, there are a million fun ways you can inject your own personality into the process. You can have a blast while doing so. Start Off Super Early – Kick off prom morning with a big breakfast or brunch out at your favorite spot with the girls. Or, host a brunch with sparkling apple cider and orange juice mocktail mimosas and a big spread of delicious breakfast foods. Turn on some fun dance music and get each other amped for the fun night ahead. You only get one or two chances at prom. Make it memorable and stretch out your enjoyment of the day! Getting Ready – Pitch in with your girlfriends to hire a hair and make-up artist for the day. Take turns getting glammed up while you sip on mocktails. Watch an all-day marathon of your favorite shows. Or, get your DVR cued up with an all-day marathon of classic Prom themed movies. Pretty in Pink and Mean Girls, anyone? You can take selfies in your prom dress and capture the fun ahead of time. Professional Photographer – Mom and dad will undoubtedly be wielding their cameras come prom night. Commemorate it with beautiful high quality photos you can cherish and hold onto forever. Pimp My Ride – Spending a fortune on your transportation? Go big by renting a classic car for you and your date a parent will likely have to drive it. Alternatively, rent a big yellow school bus that fits you and 30 of your closest friends. Or try a luxury shuttle with a disco ball, blaring speakers and lounge seats. When you think outside the old school prom box, you can personalize your prom experience and have so much more fun. Go Rogue For Prom Dinner – Who made up the rule that fancy restaurants get to be the prom night dining destination? Go rogue and make alternative prom dinner plans. Keep more dollars in your pocket by hitting up your favorite local food truck. Just remember to bring along a bunch of comfy large blankets so you can set up nearby and chow down on your favorite grub. If food trucks are a little too low-key, host a potluck or grab dinner. This can be held at a family style restaurant where large dishes are shared. Host the Best Afterparty Ever – Is the lack of prom party options getting you down for post prom? Pool your funds with your best friends and rent a bounce house. Set up fun games on the lawn croquet, life size Jenga, lawn bowling and horseshoes. Put a table together with card games and board games. Set your favorite music station up to play via Pandora and a speaker system. Host late night food did anyone order ten pepperoni pizzas? If you have a pool in your yard, ask everyone to bring their bathing suits and a towel so you can have a midnight pool party. Spring for a few larger than life floaties in the form of pineapples, donuts and swans to add pizzazz. If you prefer a quiet night in watching movies and eating popcorn with your besties, do it. You can craft the most unforgettably amazing high school prom night.

Chapter 6 : Are Prom Dresses Supposed to be Long or Short? - Promsie

The word "prom" is thought to have come from "promenade," the grand march that opened a formal ball. Author Sallie G. Randolph, in Putting on Perfect Proms, Programs, & Pageants (Franklin Watts).

In both cases, the dancing reaffirmed community networks and relations and ensured that the rituals of courtship were passed on to the next generation. Indeed, young women found that their parents usually accompanied them to these dances, or they found an acceptable chaperon, a practice common among emigrants from southern and eastern Europe and Mexico. By the s, working-class youth began to organize their own dances called "rackets. Club members usually met once a week in saloons, settlement houses, rented halls, or cigar stores; or in their own hangouts, which they set up in the basements of tenement flats to entertain their dates with dances, skits, and games. Most social clubs also held a semiannual or annual dance in a neighborhood hall, using the money they raised to pay for club activities. Over the next few decades, dancing became a veritable craze, leading to a dramatic increase in the number and types of dance halls. By the s, dance palaces joined the neighborhood or saloon halls as the popularity of dancing continued to grow. The dance palace was a more elaborate and conspicuous commercialized attraction than the multiple-purpose hall and was usually larger, accommodating anywhere from to 3, patrons. The dance palace also attracted men and women from all walks of life and nationalities, although individual dance palaces typically were segregated by class and race. The anonymity young couples found at dance halls encouraged the development of a peer culture. Commercial dance halls typically attracted men and women in their late teens and early twenties. Apart from their parents, they could experiment with alcohol and cigarettes and dabble in romance. Men and women were frequently seen closely embracing each other in the balcony or in the chairs and tables surrounding the dance floor. The dance hall had even earned the reputation among certain classes as a parlor because of the numbers of married couples who first met at a dance. The new social dances from the period only reinforced the opportunity to mingle. By the late nineteenth century, pivoting, spieling, and tough dancing were beginning to replace the traditional waltz and two-step. Pivoting and spieling were a fast parody of the waltz, in which couples closely embraced each other and engaged in much twisting and twirling. With the waltz, men and women did place their hands on each other. The tough dances, also known as animal and rag dances, were even more out of control. Tough dances were performed from a crouched position with knees flexed and body bent. Many of these dances, like the turkey trot, bunny hug, and grizzly bear , imitated animal gestures and movements while celebrating improvisation and a sexually expressive look and feel. Over the next few decades this form of dancing grew increasingly popular. The s saw the rise of the shimmy, the black bottom, and the Charleston, while swing music was all the rage by the s and young couples were dancing the lindy, also known as the jitterbug. Swing music, which came from big bands and produced an ensemble sound, began to replace the smaller jazz combos. Swing was less restrained and less ornate than its jazzy predecessors, and it was more individualistic, a sound that fit well with the lindy. Like the Charleston and other dances from the s, the lindy required partners to touch hands or dance apart instead of in an exclusively face-to-face position. In particular, the lindy featured the breakaway or solo, typically reserved for the male, and the "air steps," in which dancers showed off their skill by dancing with their feet off the ground through a number of gymnastic moves. Dance hall patrons did confront a number of problems, however. Across the country, cities and states successfully passed ordinances to restrict the use of alcohol and to prohibit certain dance moves, and patrons quickly realized that the dance hall did not always provide the intimacy and fun for which they were searching. Throughout the early twentieth century, there were almost always more men than women at dance halls. Indeed, some men claimed one had to know someone before being assured of getting a dance. The ratio was more disproportionate on the weekends, when there were even greater numbers of men in attendance. Commercial leisure also cost more than men and women were able to spend. Both men and women typically found that treating failed to meet their expectations. Young men could not always afford the treats their female companions demanded, while most women feared that the system of treating ensured their dependence on men. The dilemma compelled some women to attend only chaperoned dances or to attend with a female friend to discourage any unwanted sexual advances. After World War II, the gradual move toward dances in which partners frequently lost contact gave way to freestyle dances in which the partner was optional. By the 1950s, the twist was all the rage and the partner had become obsolete. Toward the end of the 1950s, rock and roll dances were beginning to fade, and there was little to replace them. Young Americans were beginning to favor heaviersounding bands like Led Zeppelin and stars like Jimi Hendrix. Dancing was rarely seen at the concerts these bands staged. Instead, concert goers preferred to "freak out" or "trip out," often while vibrating their spines or contracting their torsos. About this same time, disco, which is simply music that is reproduced "on disk" and not performed, appeared in primarily gay and African American clubs, as disc jockeys began splicing together faster soul songs to produce a continuous dance mix. At discotheques across the country, freestyle dance typically dominated the dance scene and even line dancing became popular. Throughout the rest of the twentieth century, freestyle dances continued to dominate the dance scene but not without a challenge. In the 1970s and 1980s, line dancing led to a revival of country and western bars because of the ease with which dancers could pick up the steps; and raves featured trance dancing, or what can be described as dancing with an emphasis on spinal vibrations or torso and pelvic contractions reminiscent of the "tripping out" of the late 1960s. At the same time, swing dance was making a comeback. During the 1990s, a group of swing devotees converged on New York City to learn more about swing from the original dance masters of the 1930s and 1940s. Before long swing dance was showing up in clubs and makeshift dance floors across the country. Some dancers explained their attraction to swing because of the nostalgia of the dance, while others simply wanted to dance with their partners as opposed to dancing apart from them, a common criticism of freestyle dance. A natural pageant embraces a young girl's innocence, while the glitz pageants do the complete opposite. Glitz pageants seem to be the most controversial in the child beauty pageant universe.
