

Chapter 1 : Readings in African Politics : Tom Young :

Readings in African Politics provides an overview of key topics and themes that collectively contribute to an understanding of politics in Africa. The selections included here come from a wide range of Western and non-Western sources and together represent core knowledge in the field of African politics.

The study of African states and their internal politics necessarily involves the study of governance, governing ideologies, forms of ethnic and political pluralism, monopolisation of political and economic power, popular resistance to power, convergences with and fractures from international society, chronic underdevelopment and maltreatment of citizens, the emergence of active polities nonetheless, and the use and abuse of cultural linkages amid great dynamism and widespread violence. Many theoretical approaches have evolved to address the issues of African politics. Not all are helpful and that includes those developed both in the West and Africa itself. Objectives and learning outcomes of the module By the end of the course it is anticipated participants will be able: To consider various theoretical frameworks for the analysis of African politics. To disaggregate the governments and politics of sub-Saharan African states. To establish thematic groupings for the purposes of considering and debating the governments and politics of sub-Saharan Africa. To evaluate accounts of the social and cultural origins and animations of sub-Saharan African politics. To consider normative approaches to the politics of sub-Saharan Africa and to contemplate informed alternatives for the future. To relate the governments and politics of individual sub-Saharan states to Africa-wide developments, to international pressures, and the global political economy. To pay particular attention to rural and urban political formations, and their expressions in literature, culture, religion, crime and technology. Workload 1 hour lecture per week 1 hour tutorial per week Scope and syllabus Week 1: Sovereignty, State Formation and Governance Week 4: Sources of Cohesion and Division I: Ethnicity and Nationalism Week Sources of Cohesion and Division II: The Politics of Race and Class Week Resistance, Overthrow and Revolution Week Violence, Civil War and Genocide Week State Failure and Collapse Week Peacebuilding and Transitional Justice Week Poverty, Famine and Humanitarian Intervention Week It is these, together with the pronouncements and writings of African leaders, the articulations of African citizens and civil societies, and the articulated view of international actors that comprise the discursive formation inspired by Africa and within which Africa sits. A selective sample of bodies of academic and other literature is as follows: There is a current vogue for voluminous tomes that seek to describe Africa for readers unfamiliar with the continent. These are either vast travel documents in a line from Mungo Park or purport also to analyse Africa usually superficially and gloomily. The contemporary specimens by Martin Meredith and Guy Arnold fall into this category. There is a still highly influential body of writing by first-generation African political scientists, i. Mudimbe, The Invention of Africa: Gnosis, Philosophy, and the Order of Knowledge, Bloomington: Indiana University Press, Achille Mbembe, On the Postcolony, Berkeley: University of California Press, The broadest sweep, with depth in a way no one else should even attempt has been accomplished by: Cambridge University Press, John Iliffe, The African Poor: He has maintained his best qualities in his crusading but immaculately scholarly book: Ohio University Press, More geographically focused in East and Southern Africa, the work of Terence Ranger is unavoidable, e. Greg Mills, Poverty to Prosperity: Tafelberg, , which predated and was better than the report of the Commission for Africa, and Stephen Chan, Grasping Africa: A Tale of Tragedy and Achievement, London: Each of the 22 lecture topics detailed in the syllabus information is accompanied by readings. These have been kept to a workable minimum. Students are therefore advised to become familiar with them. All students should become familiar with key periodicals, e.
