History[edit] Hammacher Schlemmer began as a hardware store specializing in hard-to-find tools in the Bowery district of New York City in 1858. Owned by proprietors Charles Tollner and Mr. R Stern, [2] it became one of the first national hardware stores. A few months later, Stern withdrew and Toller continued the business until 1863, moving in to Bowery. Early in the Civil War, a severe coin shortage in New York City made it nearly impossible for retailers to make change for their customers. In response to this shortage, the United States government allowed merchants to mint their own coins, known as "rebellion tokens" or "copperheads". When Tollner died in 1863, year-old Schlemmer entered into a partnership with Hammacher and Peter F. William Schlemmer had been actively involved with the business since 1858, when he had moved to New York City from Germany at age twelve and worked at the storefront. After a few years, Taaks resigned. Hammacher Schlemmer was among the first companies to install a telephone in their store, as well as one of the original subscribers to the Bell Telephone Company Directory. Hammacher Schlemmer was also the first retailer to offer a number of products, such as the "Tourist Autokit," the pop-up toaster, the electric toothbrush, and the telephone answering machine, in the United States. Hammacher Schlemmer began printing and distributing a company catalog in 1888. In 1892, it printed its largest catalog to date, spanning 1,000 pages. Schlemmer, to be named Vice President several years later. Hammacher Schlemmer began prominently featuring new inventions in their catalog in the 1890s, beginning with the first pop-up toaster and portable radio in 1896. Other products included outdoor grills, several different types of coffee makers to rhinestone dog collars. Schlemmer died at the age of 67, leaving his wife, Else, in charge of the company. In 1901, Hammacher Schlemmer celebrated its year anniversary with the introduction of the first automatic steam iron and the electric broom. Else did not give birth to children, and in 1901 she executed a will naming more than Hammacher Schlemmer employees as beneficiaries. After more than 40 years as a family-held business, Hammacher Schlemmer was sold in 1941 to a group of investors and eventually turned over to John Gerald. Tampone created a wholesale division, Invento Products Corporation, as a subsidiary for invention and product development. Tampone died in 1945 as Vice-President. Roderick MacArthur created the Hammacher Schlemmer Institute as an independent but affiliated branch of the company, whose purpose is to comparatively test leading products. On December 15, 1945, MacArthur died and left the company to his heirs. In 1950, Hammacher Schlemmer became one of the first retailers to sell products over the Internet with CompuServe, the first major commercial online service in the United States. From 1950 to 1990, Hammacher Schlemmer offered products through SkyMall, a now-defunct specialty catalog that was inserted into the seat back pocket of many airline seats. In 1990, America Online built Hammacher Schlemmer a store on the Internet whereas it had previously sold products online via CompuServe. By 1990 Hammacher Schlemmer launched their own website, Hammacher. That same year, Hammacher Schlemmer celebrated its 133rd anniversary. Retail stores[edit] Hammacher Schlemmer first began as a hardware store at The Bowery, where it remained from 1858 to 1863. It later moved to The Bowery, remaining from 1863 to 1868. The famous yellow fever plague of 1865, ascribed to impure water, desolated lower Manhattan and caused business and terrified inhabitants to move out of town to Greenwich Village. As there was no individual water supply, water was furnished by numerous wells with pumps – some in the middle of Broadway. The railroad continued to White Plains. The fashionable school of William Forrest later known as Forrest and Quackenbos – where many well-known New Yorkers of past generations were educated – was located down the street. From here, the company moved into its present location at East 57th Street, in 1868. Located on the site of the famous Huntington Stables and near Park Avenue, the modern twelve-story building has housed hardware, gifts, housewares, bath, dressing room and closet furnishings, kitchen and fireplace equipment, furniture and a variety of categories of consumer products. In the 1950s, two additional stores were added to Hammacher Schlemmer, one in Chicago, Illinois and one in Beverly Hills, California. In November 1990, Hammacher Schlemmer celebrated its 133rd anniversary by unveiling a completely new interior at its landmark Manhattan store. Built in 1868, this reimagined space now displays their signature collection of the Best, the Only and the Unexpected in open, brightly lit showcases. A selection of extraordinary exhibits - including a killer whale submarine and a hovercraft - are suspended from the ceiling. This section contains content that is written like an advertisement. When he got back to England, he called to order two more sets in pink. She selected an array of bar gadgets for the men on her holiday list, some clothing and accessories for her daughters, and toys for her grandchildren. While looking around at the china, glass, and decorative accessories that were placed around the store, the Queen said, "I can see that Christmas is not going to be any trouble. In , Hammacher Schlemmer and its New York Store began selling the first Home Bowling Alley and the "Nothing Box" subsequently rechristened "The Something Box" to avoid confusion with a similarly named product "a box that did nothing but flash lights in a random sequence. The novelty captured the fancy of The Beatles, who purchase hundreds of them as gifts. Hammacher was often called in to repair that bed because "a certain young boy liked jumping on it! One of the most noticeable features is the really magnificent show windows on the Fourth Avenue side. These are furnished in the finest paneled mahogany, highly polished, and the display of tools in them does not fail to attract the attention of the veriest layman. Roat said, "Highly recommended, by the way"and disposable"you buy them in enormous rolls from Hammacher Schlemmer. The New York store was featured in a scene from the movie Joe Versus the Volcano , during which the title character played by Tom Hanks visits the store to be outfitted for an exotic trip. In a scene from the movie Beerfest , two of the characters are named Hammacher and Schlemmer, respectively. In , the unveiling of the New York store attracted a variety of celebrities, media representatives, and dignitaries who attended a gala celebration that received extensive coverage from the New York Magazine , The Today Show , Fortune , and Bloomberg News. In a scene from season 3, episode 13, of The Middle , Brick pesters Frankie about buying two of the floating beverage book holders from the Hammacher Schlemmer catalog. In a scene from season 3, episode 1, of Workaholics , Anders mentions Hammacher Schlemmer in reference to the ergonomic travel pillow around his neck that his boss Alice had told him to take off. Catalogs[edit] The U. Navy used Hammacher Schlemmer as an equipment manual for over 65 years. In , Hammacher Schlemmer produced their first illustrated catalogue and price list which showcased products with the same care received as in the mahogany cases of the New York store. Largest Printed Catalog To Date, Hammacher Schlemmer published a page catalog featuring tools for all trades in In keeping with its reputation for high quality and wide selection, the opening page stated, "Our tools are selected with great care and are of the best makes, and meritorious novelties will be, from time to time, added to our present line, our aim being to carry a complete stock of first-class tools. In , Hammacher Schlemmer printed its largest catalog to-date. Spanning 1, pages and taking a total of four years to compile, the catalog confirmed Hammacher as the most complete hardware source on the East Coast. Hammacher Schlemmer published a page brochure in to commemorate its 75th anniversary. Hammacher Schlemmer began its "gnome" campaign in - an ad campaign that featured diligent little cartoon characters in the pages of its catalogs. In , Hammacher Schlemmer debuted its housewares supplement, the first catalog of its kind in the country, with a brightly colored, yet simply titled cover. These catalogs signaled a new era in their history as the old image of hardware and tools began to fade. Their signature gnomes within the catalog pages were replaced with tin man figurines. In a full-page letter on the opening spread, they reaffirmed their commitment to customer service, pledging to continue "loyal, dedicated, trained: Now as in , things are on the move. We are in busy-ness now as we were years ago, under our policy: Their Fall Catalog is the first to include ratings from the newly established Hammacher Schlemmer Institute. One Enstar designated a "Unique" product which not only effectively performed the task for which it was designed but does so in a markedly unique manner; two Enstars meant "Best of Kind", a product identified as the best performing in some specialized class within its overall category;three Enstars distinguished a product as "Best Overall" without qualification. Evoking the charm of 18th-century Venice, this carousel offered an Old World design complete with hand-rendered scenes of Venetian landmarks. Its six jumping horses, five rocking horses, and two chariots were all hand painted and the revolving platform is varnished, solid hardwood. Because each carousel was hand-built to order, it required five months for construction. In a
