

Chapter 1 : Shakespeare - Fishing Gear & Supplies

Put a little of the Bard into your weekend as the Shakespeare Student Players revue his work in "All the World's a Stage" at 10 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 10, at the Macomb Center, Garfield Road.

As students learn to make, perform, evaluate, apply and teach theatre, it is important that they have opportunities to engage with various artistic endeavors that support the rich course work they take in the Program. Directed by Philip Taylor, this promises to be a profoundly significant and contemporary production. And check out The Crucible blog. Our signature outreach effort, Shakespeare to Go STG continues to bring their exceptional performances of Hamlet to schools across NYC, providing the opportunity for young people to experience a Shakespeare play that is meaningful and engaging. Our Program is invested in bringing new works to new audiences as we strive to really identify how the art form shapes and changes the world. As part of our mission to develop and present new theatre, Roundtable members delivered eight brand new plays in the fall semester, including two pieces from former Educational Theatre students Emily Kaczmarek and Tyler Grimes. Roundtable members will be presenting new work this spring as well, so stay tuned for further information. Also this semester, Theatrix! These performances will take place in the Blackbox theatre, March 29 - Be sure to join us, as this is the first endeavor of its kind for our program. We feel certain this festival will defy expectations. The Program applauds the work of Uproar Theatre Corp, the NYU Steinhardt club formed by Educational Theatre students, devoted to producing new theatrical works as well as sponsoring workshops, panels, and theatrical competitions for the Steinhardt community. Please check out their blog and upcoming events. Volunteers are always needed at the conferences as well. Information on several unique opportunities to be involved with the event will be published shortly. We are also moving into the time of year when NYU students look ahead to consider ways in which to be involved with summer courses and projects. Students should be on the lookout for upcoming announcements regarding auditions for the staged play readings happening in the Provincetown Playhouse this June. Students can also take the accompanying three credit course for the series, Theatre Practices: This will be directed by Dr. Nancy Smithner, and the accompanying course for this project will allow NYU students to have practical, hands-on experiences working with the young people. Our study abroad programs consistently provide transformative experiences for students, and for more insight into Puerto Rico program, please check out the Theatre Practices in Puerto Rico blog with entries written by Educational Theatre students. Have a great semester everyone!
