I, as a student who accustomed to experience fun learning in SSE, wanted to apply it in the class I practiced. The boss, then, arranged those unorganized sentences into a good paragraph, which was a procedure text. Fortunately, I had written the correct arrangement as a back-up plan. After that, I explained the structure and the language features of procedure text, and then I asked each group to make their own procedure text based on certain topic I gave. Everything ran smoothly with the right flow. You have to fulfill the curriculum demand. You have a lot of topics to cover in certain time. For the activities you have done, I think 80 minutes is too much. Moreover, this topic has been delivered before in my class. Imagine when more than 30 students move around the class that full with table quickly. In the second day, I asked them to present their procedure text in front of the class while my partner assessed them with presentation rubric. We used it since we want to assess them objectively and systematically. After that, I moved to the next topic; advertisement. We distributed the ads taken from Jakarta Post and then asked them to discuss some guiding question in some small groups. We designed the questions that can lead them to identify things related to advertisements. After small group discussion, we guide them to conclude it together. I was amazed since we could cover a topic in less than 20 minutes. However, due to limited time, we asked them to do e-reflection by sending it via email. From their reflection, we know that almost every one enjoyed those two days experience. The classroom rules we agreed at the beginning of the class really help us to control them. As solution, maybe we can schedule some fun learning activities once a week since students like it so much.

The revelations presented in the Sins Past saga have dramatic effects not only on the history between Norman and Peter but the entire Spider-Man mythos as well. There is only one page to the letter and its clear information that information is missing. While there, Peter is attacked by two unknown assailants, one male and one female. The threats continue in Amazing Spider-Man when Peter receives an envelope that contains pictures of MJ and Aunt May, with a note that says "we can kill them whenever we want". Peter takes the letter to Detective Lamont, who passes the letter on to forensics in order to figure out if something was written on the back side of the paper, which might possibly provide more insight into what is going on. Soon after, Lamont gives the letter back with the small amount of information that could be retrieved from the original letter. Shockingly, Peter discovers that Gwen was pregnant with twins, Sarah and Gabriel, and that she had secretly given birth to them. While running the genetic tests, Sarah pays Peter a surprise visit. She claims that Gabriel wants to see Spider-Man suffer and then he is going to kill him. A fight ensues and Peter unmasks Sarah only to reveal an uncanny resemblance to her mother, Gwen Stacy. On the last panel of this issue, MJ tells Peter that she is aware who the real father is. MJ provides Peter with the full story, at least the parts that she is aware of, in Amazing Spider-Man She tells Peter that Gwen confided in her in regards to an affair she had with Norman Osborn roughly 7 months before she died. MJ explains that she had given Gwen her word that she would keep this secret and not share it with anyone, especially Peter. MJ had overheard an argument between Norman and Gwen just before her death , in which Norman demanded that the twins be placed under his care. She goes on to say that she will tell Peter the truth and that he will help her raise the children, since he is the only one "fit" to do so. Gwen states that she had gone to see Norman 7 months prior regarding "something else" for more insight into the timeline see The Memories Return section. Shortly after, Gwen had given birth to the children in Europe, where they remained. Apparently the children were born two months premature, but fully grown, certainly a strange occurrence. The answer to both anomalies: Norman tells Gwen that his Osborn blood is his true legacy. In Amazing Spider-Man Peter holds a press conference in which he tells the twins to "meet [him] in the place where [he] saw their mother for the last time", and that place is the Brooklyn Bridge. The twins soon arrive at the bridge and they provide Peter with their side of the story. They claim that Norman was their "anchor" while growing up and that he was always there for them. Peter then explains the truth to them that Norman is the villainous Green Goblin and that he had fed the children the false information and brainwashed them. Norman had them convinced that Peter Parker was their father and that he had abandoned them and that Spider-Man had killed their mother. It is important to note that Norman never told them that Spider-Man and Peter are one in the same. Peter is able to save Sarah as she is falling off the edge and he then rushes her to the hospital. Peter gives Sarah his blood to keep her alive, meanwhile Gabriel remembers instructions he was given by Osborn to find one his Goblin hideouts. This "flawed" combination has caused "unexpected mutations in [their] genetic code, so that the rapid healing factor became a rapid aging factor". She shoots his Goblin glider, which then explodes, sending him crashing into the harbor. Soon after, he washes up on shore with temporary amnesia. After saving Peter, Sarah leaves, claiming that she has to "go away. Whether or not S. The next time Norman is seen is in S.

He enjoyed taking early African history here and learned more about his Nigerian culture as well as other cultures of Africa. Aside from school related activities, James enjoys playing and watching soccer as well as listening to music. In modern times, twins are known to originate from the same zygote and form into two embryos. To some families, having twins is a blessing, while to others it can be a very stressful burden. Twins had unique roles in many West African cultures in the Iron Age, a period in spanning from the first millennium to the 19th century. The Igbo speaking-people of southeast Nigeria, for example, feared the birth of twins. By contrast, their Yoruba neighbors, in southwest Nigeria, praised the birth of twins. Unlike the Igbo, the Yoruba saw twins to be of great importance. The twins were highly looked after and treated with honor. The communities in which they were born, for example, honored twins with a monthly feast. However, if twin siblings were neglected, one or both of them would become severely ill and potentially die. If this happened, misfortune would be brought upon their parents and the entire community. Twins were just as important in death as they were in life. When one or both of the twins died, an Ibeji statue would be carved out in their memory. The parents would treat these statues as if they were the living children by singing to them as well as feeding and caring for them. Parents that failed to take care of the Ibeji statues would suffer consequences such as poverty and illness. Mobolade, The Ibeji statute available at the Museum of Art and Archaeology is a valuable record of this Yoruba cultural practice and belief. Although West Africa was rich in gold, the craftsman preferred to build them with bronze or wood. Wood and terracotta were abundant in West Africa during the Iron Age. However, bronze, an alloy of copper and tin, was not available, and copper in particular had to be imported from North Africa and Asia through commercial routes extending across the Sahara Desert. Shillington, West Africans valued copper highly and purchased it with gold dust in addition to other commodities produced in the region. In conclusion, during the Iron Age, twins played an important, spiritual role among several societies of West Africa. Some societies, such as the Igbo, killed twins out of a greater fear. The Yoruba loved twins and worshipped them as Gods, knowing that if they did not, the consequences would be dire. The reasons why different cultures in West Africa had different views on how twins were to be treated varied according to their own religious beliefs. They may have interpreted these beliefs differently from one generation to another, but whether seen as good or evil twins remained as important spiritual figures among many African cultures during the Iron Age.
