Andy, Belle, Marbles, Olaf, and Spike. They were born at the Daisy Hill Puppy Farm. Most often seen is Spike, who lives a hermit-like existence in the desert, near the real-life location of Needles, California. He is a small, yellow bird of indeterminate species. He speaks in a chirping language that only Snoopy and his other bird friends can understand. In some strips, Snoopy can be seen telling a joke to Woodstock and both laugh so hard they end up falling off the doghouse. He and Fifi do a trapeze act and afterward, he runs away, taking Fifi with him. Fifi decides to go back to the circus, however, leaving Snoopy heartbroken and forced to return to Charlie Brown. Snoopy, Woodstock, and the Beagle Scouts set out on a mission to rescue her. Eventually, they save her, and she shows her affection to Snoopy. Reception[ edit ] Snoopy and Charlie Brown were ranked by TV Guide as the 8th greatest cartoon characters of all time. Caldwell felt that Snoopy "was never a full participant in the tangle of relationships that drove Peanuts in its Golden Age", as he could not talk. He went on to say that Snoopy "was way too shallow for the strip as it developed in the s, and the strips he featured in were anomalies. Following the Apollo 1 fire, Snoopy became the official mascot of aerospace safety, testing and the rebuilding of the Apollo Program. The Apollo 10 lunar module was named Snoopy and the command module Charlie Brown. While not included in the official mission logo , Charlie Brown and Snoopy became semi-official mascots for the mission, as seen here and here. Schulz also drew some special mission-related artwork for NASA , and several regular strips related to the mission, one showing Snoopy en route to the moon atop his doghouse with a fishbowl on his head for a helmet. The New York Times headlined: But Sparky has always had faith in the Apollo program, from the very start, and he felt if those men could risk their lives, the least he could do would be to risk the popularity of the characters. The Silver Snoopy award is a special NASA honor, in the form of a sterling silver pin with an engraving of Snoopy in a spacesuit helmet. It is given by an astronaut to someone who works in the space program that has gone above and beyond in pursuit of quality and safety. Snoopy One, Snoopy Two, and Snoopy J are three airships owned and operated by MetLife that provide aerial coverage of sporting events, and feature Snoopy as the World War I flying ace on their fuselage. As of October 20, , MetLife no longer features Snoopy in its commercials, due to a global rebranding.

Spike[ edit ] Spike appeared most frequently in the strip. His appearance is similar to that of Snoopy, but he is substantially thinner, has a perpetually sleepy look, sports long, droopy whiskers that look like a mustache , and wears a fedora. He sometimes wears Mickey Mouse shoes which were a gift from Mickey Mouse. Spike lives alone in a cactus , in the middle of the desert near Needles, California , only occasionally interacting with the principal characters in the strip, generally in visiting Snoopy. His friends are mostly inanimate saguaro cacti. Although he got a better-fed appearance after his first visit to the Brown household, he apparently had to go "back to business" soon after returning home, for he soon became as thin as before. Spike competes in a dog race to earn money for a bus ticket. He wins the race, but then gets disqualified for not being a greyhound. The coyotes were apparently furious after Spike tried to sell them oceanfront condos in the desert of Needles. Snoopy, of course, comes to realize that the claim was false, after Spike admitted that his "friend", a saguaro cactus, had told him the rumor. On February 15, , Spike attempts to bury his fedora in a time capsule for a future civilization to study "Do not open until ! Spike pulls off a real estate coup in which the coyotes still living in Phoenix bought the vacant lot so the kids can once again play. Spike was used in one-off appearances sporadically through the rest of Peanuts history but he was a recurring character between the years of 1967-1970. Another storyline was in 1970, when he and his brothers Olaf and Andy visit Snoopy in the hospital. They leave shortly after Snoopy gets well. This was her sole appearance in the strip. At least two strips mentioned his meeting with Mickey Mouse. In the September 18, Sunday comic, Spike admits that he ran away from his owners to Needles after accidentally chasing a rabbit into a road, where it was run over. Andy and Olaf[ edit ] Andy and Olaf live together on a farm. Andy is distinguished by his shaggy coat, but otherwise looks like Snoopy. Olaf does not bear much resemblance to Snoopy or his other siblings. He also wears a hunting cap. Olaf now has taken residence in Orange, California and works as a maintenance manager in a department store. Olaf also says his favorite book is still "Joe Bunny", which he has owned since puppyhood. Olaf is first seen during a series on January 19, , in which he visits Snoopy. During this sequence, Lucy enters with Olaf in an "ugly dog" contest, which he wins much to his disappointment. He appears again in beginning February 14 , where he, Andy, and Spike visit Snoopy, who is in the hospital. After Snoopy gets better, the three brothers leave without saying good-bye. This is the first appearance of Andy in the strip. After that, Olaf and Andy are shown four times in 1971. They are sitting against a barn , contemplating what direction their lives should go in. They appear sporadically after that. Olaf usually plays the jug , and Andy has a full drum set, but is rather clumsy when carrying it and drops it from time to time. Andy and Olaf spent some time traveling to Needles to live with Spike. Notably, Andy is the only Peanuts character to have originated in animation before appearing in the strip with the exception of Molly, Rover, and Missy, the mother. Andy is based on a wire-haired fox terrier also named Andy that Schulz owned from October to March 1972. She is known for making bows. Once she made a bow which looked like the British flag. She also wore a beret in the Snoopy and his Siblings episode, "Ma Cherie: The Trip to Paris ". Belle herself resembles her brother, but with longer eyelashes. In addition, she wears a lace collar. Sometimes, she wears a pearl necklace. Belle only made a few appearances in the strip, but is remembered because of the Belle stuffed animal toys sold in the late 1970s and early 1980s. While she was mentioned in the lyrics to the opening theme song, Belle never made an appearance in the cartoon series. Similar to Spike, Belle also plays the violin. In 1972, Snoopy and Belle inspired fashion designers around the world, including Lagerfeld , Armani , and de la Renta to create one-of-a-kind outfits in their honor. Both beagles modeled for the "Snoopy in Fashion" exhibition held that year in Japan. Marbles[ edit ] Marbles, reputedly the smartest of the siblings, is a spotted beagle whose few appearances in the comic strip were in from September 30 to October 9. Marbles plays the banjo. In the television show, these two siblings play the dobro and the mandolin. Molly is shown to be pampered because she has her own makeup.

Peter Pan records, always eager to take any new fad and turn it into a record for children, eagerly jumped on the "beagle versus flying ace" bandwagon. First, in on Peter Pan , we have Snoopy vs. Just one year later, in , we have another release, this time on the Diplomat label SX Same title, similiar though not identical cover. But other than the title cut, completely different songs. Why Peter Pan decided to release an album with the same title and similiar cover, but use different songs, is beyond me. There is no artist credited on either the cover or the label. My guess is that Peter Pan didnt want to pay royalties, but you can draw your own conclusions. At least the graphics are better, the front is a semi-gatefold where the airplane and pilot are on a fold-over flap. Or maybe there was some scrutiny from Charles Schultz about all these songs about some dog named "Sloopy". Well, whatever the reason, in we have to deal with yet another LP. This one, bearing the exact same catalog and artist Peppermint Kandy Kids as the release, but with yet another group of songs. Even the title track was re-recorded for this release. Still no artist credit though. Of course not, for in we have another one from Peter Pan again This one used the same front and rear cover as the edition. Even though the the cover lists the same songs as the version, they are not in the same order onthe record, and have been totally re-recorded even the title track, for the 3rd time! The saga pretty much comes to an end in with this final release. The only change in the label which switches from yellow to white. Everything else remained the same from the version. A few years later a bar code was added to the back and the "punch out decoration" became a thing of the past. Peter Pan was just going through the motions, and was soon to be just a memory for the kid in all of us.

Chapter 5 : Snoopy - Wikipedia

"In my comic strip, Snoopy's brother Spike lives near this same desert town [Needles, California], where we usually see him sitting by a saguaro." —Charles M. Schulz on Spike and his solitude Spike is a main character in the Peanuts comic strip by Charles M. Schulz.

A backward glance into the misty past is necessary to set the stage for defining Needles as a unique community and for relating how she happened to be founded in the first place. Mojave Indians lived in this valley long before white people ever set foot on the land. Descendants of these early people still live here today and are called the Fort Mojave Indian Tribe. How long the Mojaves were in residence here is not known but the archaeological record shows that early people were here thousands of years ago. Ancient petroglyph, pictographs, intaglios, old trails and stone work sites bear witness of those who came before us. These features are of much interest to historians both local and throughout the world, and they especially intrigue the interest of visitors. Arrival of the railroad at the Colorado River in actually caused the founding of the town. The new settlement was named "The Needles", a namesake of the sharp peaks at the southerly end of the valley. The peaks themselves had been named by Lt. Amiel Weeks Whipple when he started the whole thing by heading the government survey for a railroad in The first bridge across this part of the Colorado River was built about , and often washed away. At first people mostly traveled to and from Needles by rail, then Old Trails Highway, later called Route 66, came into being. Its approximate route is now followed by Interstate Some of the significant events affecting the town have been the building of the dams along the Colorado River and dredging of the river by the Bureau of Reclamation in the early s, ending the long history of flooding from "hill to hill" each spring. Dredging drained the valley lands so they became suitable for agriculture and housing. The water became clear and suitable for recreation. Thus, two new industries came to the valley, agriculture and recreation. Today Needles provides many attractions to its winter and summer visitors. The Colorado River has some of the finest boating and fishing possibilities found anywhere. The Needles Municipal Golf Course, which overlooks the river, is a professional 18 hole course with a driving range, golf carts and pro shop. Continue straight ahead, passing Needles Riverview Cemetery on the left, for 4. Now you are on Broadway, the main street of Needles. Continue a short distance to another cabin court, s vintage, once widely known as palms motel, now restored to a bed and breakfast and renamed "Old Trails Inn. A few more historic motels will be noted. Continue on to pass over I at the West Broadway off ramp. This is where freeway construction brought a brief interruption of about. Curve on what is now Needles Highway to where the road forks. Left is Route Right goes to Laughlin, Nevada. At right you will see the river resort areas. You have traveled The older portion is along Front Street. Train buffs will enjoy this section as it parallels the railroad. Continue around Santa Fe Park past the turn of the century residences on the left and railroad exhibit on the right, to the cul de sac where an early s overpass directed 66 traffic onto Broadway. This section is a total of. Historians realize that the old road was on other streets at other times and research is still in progress. The street officially named "Route 66" extends from in front of the old bowling alley to the KTOX radio station and is. Add the Broadway, Front Street and Route 66 logs together and you have 12 miles of the Mother Road that can be claimed. What excited her the most? Why the palm trees of course! The Native Americans and fancy fountain at the depot were a close second. Maggie soon fell in love with the area. Throughout the years she has become quite involved with the historic preservation of our precious heritage. In fact to the roadies of Route 66 Maggie has become a Route 66 icon in her own right. Spending time with Maggie and listening to her stories takes one back to another time along the celebrated Mother Road. I know I relived the grandeur of the old El Garces listening to her words. I love this fine lady! On September 28, Maggie McShan passed away. She will be solely missed by all who knew her. She did more to promote Route 66, the El Garces Harvey House and the fascinating history of the Needles area than anyone else I know of. Route 66 is all about the people like Maggie.
