

Chapter 1 : Reward Points - Getting Started - Help - RewardsCentral

Offering great rewards is one of the best ways to encourage support for your Kickstarter project. It's always good to offer copies of what you're making, signed prints, tickets to your shows, and things like T-shirts or totes. But extra-imaginative rewards can help make your project all the more.

Tweet Offering great rewards is one of the best ways to encourage support for your Kickstarter project. But extra-imaginative rewards can help make your project all the more memorable. Looking for help thinking some up? Some have actually happened, some we dreamt up on the fly “ and all of them can be used as inspiration for your own project. A creative-process bike tour. Take backers on a roll past your favorite thinking spots, studios, or production facilities. Fill flash drives with your work, outtakes, pictures, music, scripts, designs, code, or other goodies that came out of your project. See if you can make each flash drive unique! Invite backers into the studio to throw in some handclaps on a track like Paula Cole did “ or even some backup vocals. Make a collection of all the photos in your cookbook plus a few bonus shots! Make that food truck into an immersive experience! Share some of your starter and directions on how to tend it and make delicious bread. Fifteen minutes of podcast fame. Let a backer act as a co-interviewer with you. Open up the writers room one morning and allow a backer to sit in on the creative process. Plate up a decadent meal at your Kickstarter-funded restaurant. Offer up some naming rights. A rural farm in the Andes built a free-range chicken coop and offered a chance to name their cockerel. Keys to the kingdom. Share code keys so backers can hack away. Write backers into the storyline in your next piece then, of course, send it to them. Print up some super good ones. Give backers a plant from the community garden “ either sent out at harvest time, or dedicated during planting season. Settle in for a minute phone call and share tips on making a project happen “ or just listen to a backer tell you about their day. Make screenwriting dreams come true and let backers write a couple lines of dialogue. All Black Cats Are Not Alike invited backers to submit their kitties as candidates for inclusion in the book. Do a limited-run, hand-numbered, colored-vinyl pressing of your album. Make a special expansion pack for backers only. Make popsicle trays or cookie cutters that spell out a message. Record a three-minute video answering three questions even better if you do it for three backers. Go down in Urban Dictionary history. Let backers be your extras. Just like they did with Veronica Mars! Mail it out from a live show like a shorthand love letter. Send someone a marked-up copy of your first draft “ critiques, typos, and all. Welcome to the nitty-gritty of the revision process. Share sheet music or legit tablature for a notoriously complicated song “ or amp things up and offer it for the whole album. Give a backer a slate from the set. Try spraying it with some Krylon so that chalky memento is permanent. Cats, turtles, potbellied pigs, and goldfish are all acceptable substitutes. Send a top-secret email with a special reel of outtakes. Draw colorful imaginary friends to keep your backers company. Make custom images for your backers. Get your grub on. Throw a pizza, grilled cheese, or taco party for backers and their crew! Forno Moto offered to host a pizza happy hour. Your name in bites. Custom paint some canvas shoes or a denim coat. Make like Kenny Loggins: For everyone who backs the project, create a Drake Shake with their profile pic. Make cool beanies emblazoned with even cooler messages. Tim, meet Cookie Monster. Make time for a personal photo op and lunch date with your fans. Tim Schafer and Ron Gilbert did it! Do an exclusive interview with a blogger, writer, or journalist that they can publish. Offer backers a personal style consult and closet clean-up. Spiff up the dining table. Handwritten postcards “ sent from rest stops on tour. Host a session for backers anywhere “ it can even be a ukulele lesson! Some like it hot, hot, hot. Throw an epically foodie tasting party. Do a tasting of your product line paired with complementary food, bring a live band on board, and make it a night to remember! Hella Hot Hot Sauce even gave guests and backers a pair of sauces to take home at the end of the night. Make one calendar that highlights a holiday every single day. The where-it-happened pub crawl. Stumble through the watering holes where your big ideas took off. Backers pay for their own drinks; you provide witty commentary and copious amounts of bar snacks. Customize some quilt squares for your backers to use. Make a map of backer locations into a commemorative scroll, puzzle, or poster. Bring a backer into the spotlight. Wear a T-shirt with a their face on it during a photoshoot, interview, or premiere. Let a backer come spend one day on set. Peanut butter and pickle sandwich, anyone? Organize one for backers in your city. Find rewards, meet the creators, and party at the end! Write a song for every backer â€” like Kim Boekbinder did for her project, Infinite Minute. Follow everyone on Twitter. Bedazzle some glasses frames so backers can look extra snazzy. Hop on the track. Let backers personalize your idea â€” make an engraved version or stamp on some custom messages. Make those guitar picks a little more personal. Epicks offered to etch names into a set of their wooden guitar picks. Original blueprints or sketches. Just keep digital versions for yourself, in case you need them. Pack up a basket with your homemade deliciousness and a list of awesome picnic spots. Have backers join you for one â€” complete with fancy juices and mani-pedis. Dedicate the whole book to a backer. Yep, the whole book! Something from the archives. Share your obscure and much-coveted short film or demo tape from the early days. Do a limited-run poster or print â€” your unique art will live on! Want some more tips on thinking up great rewards?

No matter which industry you look at, rewards programs are there helping merchants retain and delight their valued customers. However, while there are many different kinds of rewards programs, one of the of the most universally trusted is a points program.

It is not a discourse with managers about the art of leadership but an exposition for aspirants to power about the underlying craft. To be sure, there is much in common between the two groups. But persons of power are driven by ulterior motives completely different from those of conventional executives. The strategies and tactics of the former go far beyond the usual competencies of the latter. Immediate application for most of what is presented can be found by those who have built at least a moderate base of followers and legitimated authority. A word of caution should be offered, however, for those who have not yet crossed this threshold: Meanwhile, be patiently prudent as you rise in the formal and informal hierarchy through nonthreatening visibility and contributions to the powers-that-be. Do not try to fly higher than fitly fledged. There is nothing more fatal for a fledgling than being swooped upon by an angry hawk. Reminders will be inserted throughout this book in the form of adjustments suitable for your own particular station in the sting and tang of competition. Empathy always comes easier with understanding, and efforts toward the ideal become more practically productive. An armamentarium for great power. To be diluted and painted by the reader as suits his or her own purposes. Ready flexibility Propitiousness I Three sets of three questions N-cushion billiard I Injected hopelessness Concomitant blame I Adaptive centrality I Multifaceted speed I Surprise I Chinese baseball I Antisocial context I Interpretive prerogative Consolidation I Cessation of active confrontation Conduct of negotiation Ends and means I Bigness I Institutional power amplification I Depersonalization I Personal options I Duty I Compassion I But its objective is much more important. I would like to invite your closest collaboration. If we are successful, you will be well on your way toward developing the kind of readiness reflex from which durable power springs. There are two essential facets to this potential. The first is a continuing feel for the relevant totality, so that you always instinctively react in consonance with the enveloping whole, thereby infusing your own actions with its orchestrated resilience and concerted force. The pithy brevity of this part has been 1 2 Power posture adapted to stimulate this sensing of the totality at one glance, as it were. The second is an intuitive facility in sensing the hidden agendas, being aware of what is not said, and quickening to what has not yet happened. Hence, as an introductory exercise, the style of presentation: The following approach has proved worthwhile for many readers. You may wish to try it. Pick up the book on a relaxed occasion, when you can devote forty minutes or so to it. Ignoring the bracketed numbers for the time being, leisurely go over this part as written in one sitting. In the process, let the words enter your eyes freely and fully, without being concerned about what they may mean in particular. Let the thoughts and sensations come as they will. Then lay the book aside for several days or more. Return to it at another relaxing opportunity. Mter that, peruse here and there within it at random: Now lay the book aside for another week or more. Mter that, feel free to proceed in whatever way comes naturally to you. You will be appropriately prepared to get the most out of the Operational Specifics-to note the cross-linkages of the various aspects of power, to feel at relative ease with voids and strangeness, to criticize profitably what has been written, to modify and embellish, and to incorporate whatever is valuable into your own repertory. They feel more at ease with the myth of the meek inheriting the land. They turn aside and pretend. What opportunities for blessed exploitationsl 3 You recognize the essence of democracy[2] beyond the pretenses. It is the sharing of power. Most people merely participate in its dance. But you are determined to share. No longer will you rest contented as mere executive. You will become a person of power, [3] of great power. A voice within you whispers: Now, it is your turn to conceal and pretend. The one who is inept and faint-hearted only gets in the way and messes up the tournament grounds with his splintered lance and sorry carcass. If you fail this first test, go no further. Melt into the acquiescent herd. When the heat is not too hot, shadow-box a few rounds. Pontificate from the pulpit and snicker through the editorials. All the while, endure the ghetto deprivations, enjoy the suburban barbecue, dissipate the unearned inheritance. Great power is not your cup of sassafras. Meter the inputs, gauge the activation barriers, inject the impellences, time the catalysts, and channel the outputs. Be the steely professional,[6] through and through. It is only transformed or transferred. Grab more from those with more. Grab less from those with less. And counter-grab from those who grab from you. Keep the persons behind the scenes in mind. Fortify yourself against the likes of you. Of course, millions will be bombed to fleshy scraps The remorse can be washed away with the universal absolution: Draw an inspiring rationale for your past actions and present pOEZition, a ringing call for your continuing expansion, a vigorous condemnation of your formidable oppositions. Put your best minds to it. Learning the fundamentals 17 7 Do not confuse exhilaration with power. Watch the ratios of desired change to total, of necessary resources for planned progress to that expended, of well-executed to all directives issued by you. Maximize all three efficiencies. Design action increments within the span of personal attention. Adhere to a schedule with a deadline for closure. Applause from the public galleries is vaporous. Gains from unanticipated quarters are peripheral; returns beyond time of interest superfluous. Cruelty is only a tantrum of frustrated power. They lost first the money in their pockets, then the merchandise on their carts, and finally the clothes off their backs, to freeze to death in the bleak north by the cold winds off the Gobi. Set a loss limit and stick to it. Martyrs must be honored if power is to flourish. Dividends distributed if confidence is to last. But be very, very, very, very circumspect about the delegation of authority. If you meet its requirements for desired service, it will meet yours for lusty power. Be beneficent of sorts and reign long.
