He said, "I also figured out that Springfield was one of the most common names for a city in the U. But if you look at the clues, you can figure it out. The episode " Beware My Cheating Bart " played upon the unidentifiability of the state in its opening chalkboard gag, which stated that "The true location of Springfield is in any state but yours". David Silverman , who directed the movie and various episodes of the series, joked that Springfield is located in the fictional state of "North Takoma". Charles County and Western St. Louis County, Missouri [18] and Puerto Rico. To promote The Simpsons Movie, various factual towns and cities across the U. The dissenters founded the nearby town of Shelbyville , after fellow pioneer Shelbyville Manhattan, and the two cities remain rivals after centuries. Springfield, the West Springfield Desert "three times the size of Texas! The Springfield Mystery Spot seen in " Homer at the Bat " , apparently a portal to another dimension, is a popular tourist attraction. However, it has been subject to many natural disasters, including heat waves, blizzards, avalanches, earthquakes, acid rain, floods, hurricanes, lightning strikes, tornadoes, and volcanic eruptions. Previous representatives include Horace Wilcox, who died of a heart attack while in office, and Bob Arnold, who is forced to resign after Lisa exposes his corruption. The town is infamous for its corruption. The Springfield Shopper is a town newspaper, although it mainly prints tabloid-like newspapers and thus, in the episode Three Gays of the Condo, it is stated that the headlines are "all a joke" and that most other people read the New York Times. However, the New York Times has never been mentioned since. Among the more alarming safety violations are emergency exits that are just painted on the wall, cracks in the cooling towers held together by tape, massive amounts of poorly stored toxic waste and dangerously unqualified personnel mainly Simpson , some of which are not even human, such as a chicken that briefly substituted for Homer, and a duck that was used to pull a cart of toxic waste around. A running gag in earlier seasons was the poor security of the plant, with the outside security booth often going unmanned, but this has changed in recent episodes, with the entrance to the plant being heavily guarded. The plant has come close to a meltdown several times and has blown up at least once. There is a crow or raven that lives near the Power Plant that caws whenever an establishing shot of the Power Plant is on screen. Mutated fish with more than two eyes have been seen in the lake behind the power plant, which has a large pipe pumping nuclear waste into it. Burns, the plant is endowed with flippered mutants. In the Season 25 episode " Homeland ", he comments that the air conditioning system has never worked properly. In one episode , Mr. Burns mentions that he owns the electric company as part of his power monopoly. The plant offers yearly visits from the Springfield Elementary School. In " Stark Raving Dad ", a street sign reading "Highland" is seen outside one of the front windows, in the same blue color as is used for signs for Highland Avenue in Los Angeles. Likewise, three buildings are visible that are similar to some of those that might be seen on that street: However, Apu mentions at a bachelor auction that he runs his own business in " The Two Mrs. In addition to the sale of food, alcoholic beverages, cigarettes, and other items offered at a typical convenience store, gasoline pumps have been shown in front on two occasions. The Springfield Shopper also sells well there and it is where Principal Seymour Skinner purchases his tabloids. However, they, along with the Kwik-E-Mart, are destroyed due to Bart accidentally interrupting a live mortar exercise at Fort Springfield when visiting the re-enlisted Skinner, forcing the soldiers to redirect the mortar fire into the town, destroying the store and pumps off screen. The episode " Scenes from the Class Struggle in Springfield " also shows the pumps where Apu refuses to go out and serve a customer on the forecourt. This can be seen during the opening of The Simpsons Movie. In the episode titled " Worst Episode Ever " which is a remark often used by Comic Book Guy , Bart and Milhouse are given the job of running the comic book store after Comic Book Guy suffers from a stress-induced heart attack and is instructed to try and gain a social life. During their brief tenure at the store, Bart and Milhouse discover a secret room filled with bootleg videotapes of various extremely rare or illegal subjects, such as a taping of Mr. Rogers on a drunken bender and several interrogation tapes from the Springfield Police. These tapes are later confiscated during a police raid on the store. It was damaged in The Simpsons Movie, like most of the rest of the town, with Comic Book Guy living out of the ruins, considering that all-in-all, his life collecting comics had been "well spent". Marge decides she will keep the gift for her own use and goes bowling for the first time. This is seen destroyed in The Simpsons Movie. This episode reveals where the bowling pins go after they are knocked over; the pins are shown ending up in a heap and new pins are manufactured instantly by a Rube Goldberg device to replace those knocked over, in a massively wasteful process that only produces one pin out of a single tree. The Bowl-A-Rama is used in the episode "Homer vs. In this episode, alcohol is banned in Springfield and Homer begins bootlegging beer he uncovered from the city dump. Costington, the store has employed many Springfieldians, including Homer as their parade Santa and as a mattress salesman, Gil and The Yes Guy. It was first seen in the episode "Trash of The Titans". The station jingle is "No sports, no rock, no information! Homer finishes his beer with 15 seconds to spare only to find the store owner has closed early. The Leftorium[edit] The Leftorium is a store in the Springfield Mall that specializes in products for left-handed people. Irritated with Flanders, Homer wished that the store would go out of business after Homer received the larger half of a wishbone. Homer then regretted making this wish and the fact that he never told any of his friends who were in need of left-handed items about The Leftorium. The Leftorium has continued to thrive since. However, there have been episodes where Flanders mentioned the store does not do that well, such as in the season ten episode "Thirty Minutes over Tokyo", where Ned mentions that he purchased most of his possessions cheaply, and that the business moved way downhill since "Leftopolis" moved in next door to it. In the episode "Home Away from Homer", Ned mentions that a recently opened, left-hand megastore, called "Left-Mart" a parody of Wal-Mart is threatening his business. A future episode reveals that Flanders has been reduced to running the Leftorium out of a mall cart, which he splits with a cosmetic saleswoman. Noiseland Video Arcade[edit] Noiseland Video Arcade is the video arcade in downtown Springfield, a popular place for the youth. The video arcade has had several appearances in The Simpsons, although mostly in the earlier seasons. The earliest known appearance was in "Moaning Lisa" where Bart challenges Homer to a boxing game on their home TV game system. As Bart is continuously undefeated, Homer decides to fight back by going to the video arcade to learn from the young children how to win in the same boxing game. Homer almost beats Bart but Marge switches off the game at the crucial moment. It was seen destroyed briefly in The Simpsons Movie. It is first seen in "The Fat and the Furriest". While the entire Simpson family has shopped there, and Homer and Abe worked there, it is a terrible place to work, perhaps worse than the Power Plant, with low pay, 24 hours a day shifts, no bathroom breaks, and fake passports given to American citizens to get arrested, if ever caught escaping. They also implant microchips in the workers during the company physicals that give them electroshocks if they try to leave. Even though most of the workers have already managed to remove their chips, they stay anyway, since they use the lack of management during nightshifts to steal from the store. Despite being told by Try-N-Save security Don Brodka to never return to the store because of shoplifting, Bart is forced to go back with his family for a photo portrait session. The store also appears in the "Kamp Krusty" episode. As the name implies, it serves both men and women. It is owned and operated by Jake the Barber. Their mascot appears to be an anthropomorphic hex key named Allen Wrench, but rather than being a costume is in fact an alien being who needs tungsten to live. Cutlery in the canteen is self-made from Lego, allowing Homer to create a multi-pronged fork. Coolsville Comics and Toys[edit] Coolsville only appeared once, on the Season 19 episode 7 episode of "Husbands and Knives". Unlike Comic Book Guy, Milo treats the kids like royalty and lets them read comics at leisure, rather than hoarding them until the time is ripe. He also started an autograph signing with three famous writers. Comic Book Guy goes out of business in the episode, but somehow jumps back in the next. It is a law firm visited by the Simpsons on multiple occasions, including when Bart was hit by a car. Hutz usually has an incentive for visiting, such as smoking monkeys. His number is 5-LAWW, or In "You Kent Always Say What You Want", Homer purchased the 1,,th ice-cream cone though briefly lost the prize because he could not decide between a cup or a cone, and won a special interview with Kent Brockman. Hairy Shearers[edit] A barbershop; pun on the name of the actor Harry Shearer. It is frequented by Marge

Simpson whose massive hairdo requires significant effort to maintain. In "Hungry, Hungry Homer", they refused to honor her coupon for discount hair streaks, as their thin profit margins would ruin them, but Homer in an unusual exhibition of helpfulness assisted the owner with finding ways of decreasing their spending, and they honored the coupon in return. The restaurant once employed Groundskeeper Willie until he quit and returned to his old job at Springfield Elementary. The restaurant serves French cuisine. It first appeared in the episode "Bart The Lover". The store is "worldwide-famous" for his truffles. The tavern is named after and run by Moe Szyslak. In the first season of The Simpsons, the entrance appeared to be a saloon door. The bar sells mostly Duff Beer although other beverages are served. The drink becomes extremely popular until Homer reveals its secret ingredient, allowing other businesses to create a similar product. A recurring gag is the dirty and dilapidated state of the bar. The tavern had to be briefly shut down as shown in "Who Shot Mr. In addition, it is turned into an English pub named Nag and Weasel in the episode "Mommie Beerest". In the episode "Homer the Smithers", Mr. As a result, if one was to spell Smithers name out on a telephone keypad, the fictional phone number minus the area code for the tavern would be revealed as 7. Though there was one name that backfired on Bart when he asked for Hugh Jass, who had been sitting in the tavern. It is now a Starbucks. Krusty Burger[edit] Krusty Burger is a fast food restaurant chain owned by Krusty the Clown as one of his many branded products and services. A typical store features a drive-thru with a speaker box and most of the employees are young teenage workers. It happens to be a map of the entire United States with locations of Krusty Burger restaurants.
