Christiaan de Wet was appointed as commander-in-chief of the Orange Free State. He gathered his commandos at Poplar Grove, about ten miles upstream of Paardeberg and on the way to Bloemfontein, the capital of the Orange Free State. De Wet hastily assembled his burghers in sangars which straddled the Modder River along a line of hillocks, about ten miles wide. No sooner had he arrived than it was reported that Lord Roberts had commenced his advance on Bloemfontein. Kruger was bundled back into his cart and sent on his way. The attack[ edit ] The plan was quite simple: The infantry and the artillery would then attack them from the right. French, the cavalry division, some mounted infantry units and the horse artillery with 42 guns, carried out their order. But the Boers "did not behave like well-bred pheasants". Sir Arthur Conan Doyle wrote of it: It was that after having prepared so elaborate a position the enemy would stop at least a little time to defend it. When they saw the cavalry at a distance, they all fled. De Wet and his officers tried in vain to stop them. There they resisted the advance quite bravely the next day, but that night they fled to Bloemfontein. Again the commandos were placed in defensive positions, ready to prevent Roberts from taking the capital. That night De Wet visited all the commandos. When he reached the southern positions, it was a different matter. One of the commandos had simply abandoned their position. When the fighting started the next day, the Boers once again abandoned their positions and fled northwards. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: The Great Boer War, Kindle edition.

It is likely borrowed from the Dutch words bloem flower and fontein fountain , meaning fountain of flowers. Popular legends include an ox named "Bloem" owned by Rudolphus Martinus Brits, one of the pioneer farmers that was taken by a lion near a fountain on his property, while another story names Jan Bloem , a Korana KhoiKhoi leader who settled there. Early history[ edit ] Though historically a predominantly Afrikaner settlement, Bloemfontein was officially founded in as a fort by British army major Henry Douglas Warden as a British outpost in the Transoranje region, at that stage occupied by various groups of peoples including Cape Colony Trek Boers , Griqua , and Barolong. Warden originally chose the site largely because of its proximity to the main route to Winburg , the spacious open country, and the absence of horse sickness. Bloemfontein was the original farm of Johannes Nicolaas Brits born 21 February , owner and first inhabitant of Bloemfontein. Johann as he was known sold the farm to Major Warden. From 1810 it served as the capital of the Orange River Colony and since that time as the provincial capital of the Free State. As the capital of the Orange Free State Republic the growth and maturing of the Republic resulted in the growth of Bloemfontein. Numerous public buildings that remain in use today were constructed. This was largely facilitated by the excellent governance of the Republic which acquired the term model republic and the compensation from the British for the loss of the diamond rich Griqualand area. A railway line was built in connecting Bloemfontein to Cape Town. Tolkien was born in the city on 3 January , though his family left South Africa following the death of his father, Arthur Tolkien , while Tolkien was only three. He recorded that his earliest memories were of "a hot country". In the city was the site of the Bloemfontein Conference , which failed to prevent the outbreak of the Second Boer War. The conference was a final attempt to avert a war between Britain and the South African Republic. With its failure the stage was set for war, which broke out on 11 October The rail line from Cape Town provided a centrally located railway station , and proved critical to the British in occupying the city later. On 13 March , following the Battle of Paardeberg , British forces captured the city and built a concentration camp nearby to house Boer women and children. Its primary aim was to fight for the rights of black South Africans. Apartheid era [ edit ] When the National Party won the South African national government elections they began implementing the policy known as apartheid. The policy was built on white supremacy and racial segregation was implemented. In Bloemfontein, residential segregation had begun in the 19th century with the passing of Ordinance 1 of , which determined that no non-white, without written permission from the landlord, had the right to occupy urban land in towns where local municipalities did not yet exist. On 3 June , the council demarcated three locations in the following areas; the black population was to move to the area which lied to the right of a neighbourhood that was known as Kaffirfontein, Coloureds were to move to the Waaihoek Black residential area on the eastern outskirts of the town. The inhabitants of these settlements had to pay taxes; the so-called hut tax as well as tax on grazing rights. When the South African apartheid government passed the Group Areas Act of , the Bloemfontein municipality put into effect changes in the racial set-up of the city. However, due to Coloureds living in such close proximity with black people; intermarriages across racial lines occurred, resulting in a partial mixed population in Heidedal and Mangaung. New residential areas to separate ethnic groups such as Sotho , Xhosa and Tswana were formed. The residential areas were jointly known as Mangaung. Physical buffers such as the railway line and roads were put into place to separate black ethnic groups, the white and coloured population. The Bloemfontein municipality channelled of all black urbanisation to Thaba Nchu and Botshabelo. Botshabelo was developed as source of cheap labour for the city of Bloemfontein. A subsidised bus service was established, and Botshabelo was declared decentralisation point. This means that Botshabelo was to become an industrial development point in order to reduce the distance between place of employment and place of residence. In , an approximate 14 people were commuting on a daily basis between Botshabelo and Bloemfontein. The Motheo District Municipality was disestablished on 18 May and Mangaung was upgraded to become an autonomous metropolitan municipality with Bloemfontein as the main seat. Since [ edit ] Until the city was the sole judicial capital of South Africa. It is also an administrative center with many private hospitals and educational institutions. The Mangaung Metropolitan Municipality elects a municipal council for five-year periods, through a mixed-member proportional representation MMP system in which wards elect individual councillors alongside those named from party lists. Voters get two votes: The latter vote is used to distribute seats in the municipal council amongst parties while the former distributes seats through the individual representatives. Geography and climate[ edit ].
