

Chapter 1 : U.S. Air Force - Pay & Benefits

The Air Force Wife Handbook is written for a very special group of women. Air Force wives are incredibly diverse, yet held together by an invisible bond. Part of this bond, the "glue" that holds these individuals together and creates unity out of this diversity, can be found in their manners and daily courtesies.

It explains how to submit a FOIA request, where to send it, what types of information and records are available, and gives you our average response times. We also list categories of records that the law exempts from release and procedures for appealing those decisions. The Air Force provides information and records through various programs and channels: The FOIA provides public access to releasable records. It does not require agencies to do research, conduct surveys, compile or analyze data, or to answer questions. Some of the types of records available through FOIA include the Roswell Report, program element descriptive summaries, contract information, courts-martial, histories, environmental impact statements, training materials, and organizational charts. The four basic guidelines for submitting a FOIA request. Avoid terms such as "requesting any and all documents" since this type of request generally requires clarification and responsive documents can include excessive costs for search and releasable documents. Recommend asking for "all releasable information" in your request. FOIA provides access to records and "is not" a forum for answering questions. State an actual dollar amount versus a willingness to pay reasonable costs. This avoids guessing what is considered reasonable and you can be contacted should processing costs exceed your limit. The request is considered properly received or perfected, when the above conditions have been met and the request arrives at the FOIA office of the Component or agency in possession of the records. FOIA requests are processed within 20 work days unless there are unusual circumstances that may justify delay whereby the requester will be contacted. Once there, we recommend you review all the links listed on the left side as they have been designed to provide information and guidance. Furnish any facts or clues about the time, place, persons, events, subjects, or other details of the information or records you want. That will help us decide where to search and determine what records pertain to your request. It can also save you and the government time and money and you may get what you want faster. Mark your request and envelope "FOIA. You will need to provide proof of identity. Air Force-affiliated requesters, to include military and civilian employees, should not use government equipment, supplies, stationery, postage, telephones, or official mail channels to make FOIA requests. Requests should be made through personal e-mail or postal service. No single office handles all FOIA requests. There are three categories: The FOIA also allows waivers or reductions in fees if disclosing the information is in the public interest. The Debt Collection Act authorizes federal agencies to charge interest. Interest charged is simple interest computed on the original principal only at the rate in effect at the time the debt became overdue. The debt remains fixed for the duration of the debt. The current value fund rate CVFR is posted at www. If special situations exist, the FOIA office will contact you with an estimated completion date and explain the reason for delay. The Air Force works requests on a first-in, first-out basis. You may file an administrative appeal with the Air Force if records responsive to your request are withheld in full or partially denied or if your request for expedited processing or a fee waiver is denied. You may submit an appeal online or by mail to the FOIA Requester Service Center that provided you with the final decision on your initial request. Please be specific about why you are submitting the appeal and provide any additional information, if possible. The FOIA provides access to federal agency records or parts of those records except those protected from release by nine specific exemptions. These are the reasons some Air Force records may not be released:

The Air Force life is not an easy one. The constant moves, deployments, North Dakota. But there are some key perks your civilian friends are simply missing out on. Immunity from Hoarding Traditionally, in America, you get married. You buy a house. You fill it with crap. So you sell the house, move, and then repeat the cycle, except next time, you rent. You are streamlined and would never think of hoarding. Oh, I know, some have tried I see those timeless and classic Longaberger baskets there, ladies but PCSing every couple of years keeps the clutter at bay. Stuff is just stuff. Better to pack on the memories and leave the tchotchkes behind for those civilians who know they will be in the same house for 40 years. Geographic Know-How You get to see the world. Mostly the desolate parts of it where the Air Force can park its airplanes, but still, you get to travel and enjoy new cultures even within our own country. With all that travel comes uncanny abilities, like being able to pack up your car with exactly what the kids and pets will need at any given moment, or the ability to use an atlas! You will know how to make the best of a 3,mile PCS move driving across the frozen Alaskan wilderness to the desert-dom of Las Vegas. And there are times when only a mom or a sister will understand and it would be nice if they could just drop by. But then there are times when you need advance warning of visitations. His luck would have it that his first and second assignments were in Florida, close enough that his mom could drop off cookies. Vic accepted his Floridian lot in life and now has a corporate job with Universal Studios. The time spent with the relatives will definitely be more special that way. They always have them for weeks longer than anywhere else and I love the Exchange for that. The inverse applies, I know. When you just need stupid AAA batteries, the Exchange will be out. But nowhere is perfect! Page 1 of 2 Prev Next You may also like.

I decided I would figure it all out as the issues arose “after all, experience is the best teacher. Almost a year into our union with one another and with the military , here are the things I wish I knew: I wish I had known how to be a better neighbor. Despite the temporary nature of our first assignment and despite the differences in military rank and branch, I wish I had been a better neighbor. It never hurts to reach out, to be kind, to offer hospitality and genuine friendship-- particularly when the only real division is one very thin wall. I wish I had known more about moving with the military before I actually moved. For instance, I would have preferred it someone had encouraged me to decrease my Air Force wife belongings by half or some other dramatically large percentage to keep my new house from filling to the brim when our boxes arrived. I have since learned the art of purging. I developed a close relationship with our local Goodwill. I am striving to maintain a healthy minimum of household goods. I wish I had known how easy it would be to develop close friendships with another Air Force wife in such a short amount of time. Recently I was with a group of girlfriends celebrating a birthday and I had a moment of epiphany that, although these women feel like soul sisters, most of us have known each other for only a few months. Yet this is the family we turn to for celebration, for commiseration, for advice, for encouragement. But the good thing is that, no matter where we go, those friends will support us from afar and new friends are always waiting to be made at the next assignment. I want to be the cool wife, the hot one, someone my husband is proud to show off and be associated with. I want to burnish his reputation with my own. I want to be the welcoming one, the hostess, the mom figure, the relationship guru. But all of that is too much to juggle at once. The squadron can take it or leave it. I wish I had more conviction about putting down roots in a way that allows me to pick them back up again and relocate without injury. This is both a metaphor and a literal phrase “I refer to myself and my plant collection. In the same way that I have struggled in our first assignment to pursue relationships, job opportunities and other commitments, I have struggled with buying plants. Should I plant this hyacinth for spring? Should I pot some herbs for the front porch? Should I transplant these succulents? What do I do with it all when we move? Regardless of the situation, there is always room for growth. Van Genderen is an Air Force wife who works as a freelance writer and editor.
